They washed and dried the dishes to companionable small talk; then Arleta donned her jacket and said she had to go.

"I'll go along and build up your fires." Kelly announced. "Duchess and I can walk back unless she elects to stay with you."

"I' think I shall buy a dog the next time I go in." Arleta remarked as they stepped into the chill air.

"Don't." he said so sharply she turned to him in surprise. Lamely he explained, "I'ls cruel to teach a dog to love you, then go off and leave him."

The drive down the canyon road was quickly made and the fire built with equal speed.

"I have to get back to that manuscript before I forget the names of my charactera. You're all right for the night, aren't you?" He started for the door, then turned back.

"Chips. I don't know why I bother. I guess it's because I'm beginning to get an inkling of the real you. Bit look girl, let someone else rebuild the ranch. You'll gain nothing by staying here, not even the Iruth. You've built up a new life, a good life. Make the moet of it. Go back to this flance, whatever his name is."
