Try Canned Peas in Chowder

Try Canned Peas—French peasant meals are known for their heartiness, their simple, straightforward goodness and their economy. So it is with this pea and potato chowder which is made easily and thrifflily with canned peas, cooked or leftover ham, and potatoes. You'll find the recipe elsewhere on the page.

Pea and potato chowder is a savory meal-in-a-dish which you'll find especially convenient when a hurry-up dinner is in order. Basic ingredient is a can of peas, a real bargain among vegetables since canned peas are ready for eating and they include no waste. Both the pea liquid and the peas themselves contain healthful vitamins and minerals.

As for the meat for your chowder, you can substitute frankfurters, canned luncheon meat or vienna sausages for the ham.

A tempting addition to the meal is paprika toasted rolls. Cut the rolls, spread them with softened butter, sprinkle paprika on top and toast them under the broiler.

Here is the recipe for pea
