MAGIC ROUTE TO SANTA

LAND

"Gladys Hadys!" exclaimed Serena when she saw what was in the dwarf's brief case. "What important looking papers!"

Promptly George George Frothingham began repacking the papers. "I positively will go no further, Serena, unless you cut out that rhyming."

"Slogum Po—" began Serena. "Good, good," said George Gorge. "Slogum Po—" began Serena. "I mean—certainly. If you can't appreciate poetry—"

"Poetry!" snapped the dwarf. "II—"

Mr. Dilly quickly interrupted "What are those strange papers in your brief case, Mr. Frothingham?"

"They are maps and time tables I have collected over many centuries," said the dwarf, dumping the stuff out again. "By studying them carefully you can find your way to most anywhere. Here for instance, is a route I mapped to the moon."

He drew out a long narrow ribbon of paper covered with strange numbers and letters. He studied it proudly. "You go in your backyard at one minute past midnight on the first night of the new moon in the last month of summer," he read. "Carry in your left pants' pocket a pound of black eyed peas and in your right pocket a thimble". "Illy and Henry and land studied it closely while Mr. Dilly, Henry and Serena stared over his shoulder.

"Santa Land Express," read cards. "Dear me, I have no cards!"

Mr. Dilly promptly pulled a pack of cards from his vest pocket. "A magician always carries cards," he said.

"Good, good," said George George.

"Frothingham began repacking the dwarf, the whole of the cards. They had a hard time of it because each time just as they were about to build a house out of the cards.
