

Santa MAGICIAN AND THE

THE FRIGHTENED RABBIT HOPPED AWAY WITH HENRY CHASING WILDLY

A TERRIBLE LOSS
 "Mackerel is important!" exclaimed Serena impatiently. "Go ahead and peep in the box. Didn't Santa say make yourself at home?"

Now Mr. Dilly always carried his magic in his pocket. He had a wand and a rope and cards and scarves and goodness knows what else stuffed into his pockets. There wasn't any room left for even a handkerchief.

But Santa kept his magic in a little black box. Mr. Dilly thought he would be the happiest man in the world if he could just see what Santa's magic looked like. He tipped into the corner and got down on his knees and carefully unhooked the box. Instantly the top sprang open.

What do you suppose was there? A wand. A simple black wand that looked exactly like the wand Mr. Dilly and every other magician carries.

"Doesn't he have any tricks?" asked Henry in surprise.

"He doesn't need tricks," said Mr. Dilly admiringly. "I guess he does all his magic with this. What a wonderful wand it must be!"

He picked up the wand and waved it in the air. "If I knew the magic words," he said wistfully, "I could get a rabbit out of my hat all by myself I guess."

"What about your book?" reminded Henry.

"Of course!" cried Mr. Dilly. He pulled out of his coat pocket a little book which was marked For Magicians Only. It explained magic tricks and had 47 pages of magic words and rhymes which magicians use when they do their magic.

Mr. Dilly opened the book to these pages and tried a few while he waved Santa's wand over his hat. "Jumbo Mumbo and a heap big Lumbo."

"Henry Billy, swing you silly."

Nothing happened at all. But by now Mr. Dilly was determined to find the words which would make Santa's wand work. He slipped the black box.

"Most of these magic words have to be said outdoors," he explained. "I'm going out in the woods and try it."

Mr. Dilly didn't mean a bit of harm. He was sure Santa wouldn't mind if he tried the wand and learned how to do the rabbit trick by himself. But he just couldn't wait for Santa to come back.

He slipped out the door. Henry and Serena went with him. Tweedle-kins had just finished hanging the last Christmas light and was feeling more cheerful.

"Where are you off to?" he asked. "Just into the woods for a bit," said Mr. Dilly.

"Mind you don't run into the Wiggle Wagglers?" said Tweedle-kins. "I hear they are all about the place."

"Who are the Wiggle Wagglers?" "Very nasty elves. And they are very, very annoyed because Santa did not send them an invitation to the party."

"Oh, yes, I remember," said Mr. Dilly. "Well, we'll be careful. Oh, but he wasn't careful at all. He just couldn't think of anything except Santa's own wand in his hands and what Dilly's splendid thing it would be if he could learn to work it all by himself."

He settled down in a little clump of trees with Serena and Henry beside him. He put his hat and his book in front of him and held the wand lovingly in his hand.

For over an hour he worked, reading the magic formulas in the book and waving the wand. Still his hat remained empty.

"Oh, yes, I remember," said Mr. Dilly. "Well, we'll be careful. Oh, but he wasn't careful at all. He just couldn't think of anything except Santa's own wand in his hands and what Dilly's splendid thing it would be if he could learn to work it all by himself."
