

Santa MAGICIAN AND THE

(Chapter 8)

HENRY MEETS A WIGGLE WAGGLE

Poor Henry. Poor Mr. Dilly. Never were two people so unhappy. "It's all my fault," wept Henry. "I must go away. Santa will never want to see me again." "No," said Mr. Dilly, almost in tears himself. "It is all my fault for taking the wand. I will tell Santa and give him all my own magic tricks. I'll never try to be a magician again."

Sadly they returned to Santa's cottage. There they found great excitement. Santa sat before his fire surrounded by Patrick, Tweedlebees and host of other little folk. Everyone seemed to be talking at once. Everyone except Santa who was quietly reading a letter.

"Mercy, deary!" said Serena cheerfully. "Has the party started?"

The little folk swirled around the newcomers. "Did you see any of them?" they cried.

"Anyone of who?" asked Mr. Dilly in surprise.

Santa looked up from his letter. "Ah," he said with a sigh. "The Wiggle Waggle have sent me a letter. They are angry that you did not invite them to the party. They say they will come anyway and beware for none of us will be left alive."

Henry met a wiggle waggle. He walked straight up to Henry, honked his nose and said, "Are you looking for Santa's magic wand?" Henry was so surprised and so joyful he could hardly speak. "Has he found it?" he finally exclaimed. "I have."

"Oh, please let me have it!" "Follow me," said the creature. But just as Henry, filled with relief, was about to obey he stopped in horror.

For the ears on the blue noosed one were moving strangely; they were wiggling and wagging on the creature's head. He was, in fact, a Wiggle Waggle.

At this moment Mrs. Claus burst into the room carrying a tray loaded with hot fresh doughnuts. "Nothing is to come of us," said Mrs. Claus cheerfully. "Have you forgotten Santa's magic wand? One wave of it and he can turn all the creatures and host of other little folk. Everyone seemed to be talking at once. Everyone except Santa who was quietly reading a letter."

"Every worker shuddered. "Oh my, oh my, what will become of us!"

"At this moment Mrs. Claus burst into the room carrying a tray loaded with hot fresh doughnuts. "Nothing is to come of us," said Mrs. Claus cheerfully. "Have you forgotten Santa's magic wand? One wave of it and he can turn all the creatures and host of other little folk. Everyone seemed to be talking at once. Everyone except Santa who was quietly reading a letter."

"We cannot tell him tonight," whispered Mr. Dilly when Santa and Mrs. Claus went into the pantry. "We'll go out in the morning and find the wand. It's bound to be there somewhere. If we told Santa now—it's true what Mrs. Claus said—we might break Santa's spirit."

After dinner Mrs. Claus put Henry to bed on a couch near the fire. Mr. Dilly stretched out on the rug and Serena squatted under a chair. But Henry never slept that night.

At daybreak he got softly from the couch and crept out of the cottage. He went to the little wood where he and Mr. Dilly had practiced their magic the day before. But now all seemed more hopeless than ever for a fresh snow had fallen and covered all tracks.

He got down on his hands and knees and explored the ground turning up the snow with his bare hands. Time and again his fingers fastened on a stick, but when he drew it out it was only a twig, never the wand.

Suddenly he heard a snoring and a honking and a clattering in the trees. He sprang to his feet and wondered whether he should not run away.

But it was too late, for coming through the woods was a queer creature no taller than Henry. His nose was blue and honked when he blew it. His ears were as large as
