Lengthening of Man's Life Biggest Thing of 20th Century

(Editor's Note:—Last Thursday the United Press carried an interview with Harvard Historian Arthur M. Schlesinger in which he picked 10 events he regarded as having the greatest impact on the first half of the 20th century.)

(Professor Schlesinger chose the emergency of the United States as a dominant world power as number one. His other nominations were World War I, the political emancipation of women, the depression, the League of Nations, the United Nations, atomic energy, World War II, the abandonment of colonial imperialism and the emergency of Russia as the second dominant world power.)

(Today's dispatch is based on selections made for the UP by Bernard Baruch.)

New York, Dec. 20 (AP)—Elder Statesman Bernard Baruch believes the most important development of the first half of the 20th century was the advance of more than 20 years in the life expectancy of man.

Replying to a United Press poll of distinguished citizens whose careers have spanned the first 50 years of the century, Baruch emphasized the social, ethical and economic problems posed by present day longevity.

Number two on Baruch's list was the first World War. He added that he did not think there was a proper grasping of the results of that conflict, and as to World War II, which was third on his list, Baruch said it was "preventable" and that no lessons were learned from it or from the first war either.

"Man's loss of confidence in himself and man's 'turning too much to the state instead of himself' was listed as the eighth most important development of the century.

Here is a text of the reply which Baruch sent in long-hand from his home in South Carolina:

"1. Advance of over 20 years in the life expectancy with all the social, ethical and economic problems.

"2. First World War. No grasping of results, especially the advance of the masses who went on the treks toward a justifiable demand of amelioration of their condition and the hope for peace.

"3. Second World War (unnecessary war) preventable if steps taken—no lessons learned from it or first war.

"4. Advent of atomic energy with possibilities for peace or war.

"5. Woodrow Wilson's new freedom.

"6. League of Nations and United Nations. Evidences of man's yearning for peace.

"7. Birth of communistic and

Norblad Will Call Meeting

Washington, Dec. 20 (AP)—Rep. Walter Norblad, R., Ore., said Monday he planned to call an informal meeting of northwest states congressmen some time in January to discuss national defense needs in the Pacific northwest.

Norblad said he is convinced the Pacific northwest, including Alaska, is "lacking in adequate defense bases in event of an enemy invasion via Alaska."

He thought the northwest coastal area had been "unwisely slighted" in the establishment of national defense bases.

"Most of our air and naval bases are now located in the deep south and along the eastern seaboard," he said. "In view of a threat of war with Russia it seems that at least a part of our air and naval strength should be deployed along the northwest coast."

Norblad said he was not advocating "any new appropriations" for such bases but rather a redistribution of naval and air forces.

He said he had no specific recommendations in mind and the exact date of the meeting has not been decided.

Eskimo Trapper Tells Proper Footwear for Icy Sidewalks

Fairbanks, Alaska, Dec. 20 (AP)—An Eskimo trapper strode out of the north today to tell his white brothers how to deal with icy sidewalks.

Simon Araklaruk of Point Barrow, Alaska, told residents here he was worried about the number of women that fall as they juggle Christmas packages along ice-covered sidewalks. "Whiteman's footwear isn't right for ice," Araklaruk explained. "White man wears overshoes or rubbers with stiff leather shoes inside. Eskimo hunter wears boot of caribou or reindeer hide—soft on bottom."

The trapper, who has pursued many a walrus over ice floes in the north sea without a slip, said soft bottom soles allow the foot to spread firmly on the ice. "No slip," he said. Araklaruk drew a sketch of an Eskimo foot, warmly encased in a native-made, knee-length mukluk—boot to residents outside Alaska.

He showed how the entire foot plants itself firmly on a hard surface to provide friction. Araklaruk said his people know that one slip on an iceberg in the far north can mean certain death in the cold northern sea.

He told about his wife as an example of what proper footwear can do.

"When ice is slick my wife wears mukluks she made herself," he said. "No trouble slipping, even with baby riding in parka hood in back."

"White woman with many Christmas packages should wear mukluks," he added.

Araklaruk inferred that the advice was his Christmas present to his white brother who doesn't know about such things as proper winter footwear.

Hindus of the third and fourth century recognized the diamond as the hardest of all substances.
