Mr. Banks Talks About
Finances With Buckley

It was quite clear to Mr. Banks that things couldn's drift along like this forever. When two people decided to get married they announced their engagement and then there was a wedding. The only question was when.

As his mind focused on the actual ceremony he began to have secret qualms about it. As Father of the bride, it became alarmingly apparent hand then bride, it became alarmingly apparent him like a public speciacie. His idea was either to get the affair over as quickly as possible or eike postpone it to a point so far distant in time that, like death, he wouldn't have to worry about it for the present at least.

Mrs. Banks, on the other hand looked at the matter more from the point of view of a stage manager. How long would it take to prepare the costumes build the scenery and collect the prope?

During the discussion that followed Buckley remained unusually silent. He was obviously a young man who was not used to getting married.

Mr. Banks and visualized a quiet, dignified conversation during which hand in the was described in the was death of the would be seated in a large armochair and Buckley in a straight chair facing him. Instead he found himself sitting beside Buckley on the living-room sofa making old Isahoneds. He finished his quickly. Somehow he felt the need of fortification.

"I guess Kay has told you," he

Tigues Kay has told you." he said, "that I wanted to have a little financial chat with you."

Too, sir," said Buckley. He reminded Mr. Banks of a family doctor paying a professional visit.

"I know what you young people are up against. You all need help and I believe parents should give it as far as they are able."

"Yes, sir," sargeed Buckley. "What I was going on to say," continued Mr. Banks of a family doctor paying a professional visit.

Buckley nodded sympathetically. "What I was going and another." Buckley nodded sympathetically. "The long and the short of it is that parents are also up against it they are

"Darling." Interrupted Mrs.
Banks. "We've been through all this before. I think you're absolutely right. I've told you so every time.

"Dar ling." Interrupted Mrs.
Buckley?" she asked as they cleared the dining room table.
"Very satisfactory," said Mr.
Banks moodily.
