CHAMPAGNE APETITES

Judging by the crowd in the living room Mr. Banks had expected to find the marquee half empty. On the contrary, it was also jammed with people. The temperature was midway between that of a Turkish bath and a greenhouse.

Mr. Banks had hired a push-and-pull man to circulate among the guests. Mr. Banks discovered him standing unnoted by one of the tent poles, dressed in his interpretation of a Neapolitan costume, obviously bursting his lugs and his instrument in his public wear. The din in the tent was so great, however, that he might have been squeezing a blacksmith's bellows and gargling his throat.

"About on a par with the champagne," said the stranger. "I thought the champagne was pretty good," said Mr. Banks defensively. "For American champagne of course," said the stranger. "Elie," said the genial stranger.

"Sparkling blige. I regard all champagne as blige, but some comes from a lower part of the hold than others. This comes from just over the keel." The young man took two dripping glasses and backed away.

Mr. Banks beckoned to one of the burmen. "How is the champagne holding out?" he asked. "The barman looked at him coldly. 'O.K., O.K.," he said. "Don't worry, mister. You'll get plenty. Mr. Banks found himself blushing, then he remembered the old Chinese proverb and decided to relax and have a look at the garden. It would be interesting to find out if it were also filled with people.

His progress through the tent was slow. Near the entrance he spotted Miss Bellamy talking to a group from the office. She detached herself and came toward him balancing a glass of champagne without too great success. He had never seen Miss Bellamy dressed like this before and it rather startled him. He didn't know just what to say, but she was obviously quite at ease.

"Boss, we certainly put on a wonderful wedding. Yes, sir. If I do say so, it was beautiful. I want to drink a toast. First, to the bride. Say, you were swell coming down the aisle. No one would ever have known you were scared."
