The gowns had berths of the self-material, pleated side pleat and full skirts. Each of the attendants wore a picture hat matching her gown in color. The matron of honor's flowers were pink carnations with trailing ivy and the two bridesmaids carried pink-tinted pompon chrysanthemums with the ivy.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Woodruff wore a navy dress with white trim, navy accessories and corsage of pale pink roses. For the wedding Mrs. Domogalla wore a taupe blue dress with black accessories and corsage of the pale pink roses.

Silverton—It may be funny at a movie to see a high diver go gracefully into a long-distance pool then flip right back up to the spring diving board feet first in a several-times repetition, but this principle of "in reverse" is no laughing matter when it comes home to a small town news gatherer.

Such little items as the following are about all the "under 5,000 inhabitants" can produce when "postponed to a future date" is the response from the usual informer.

School Training Gets Criticism

The Salem school system bore the brunt of criticism Friday when a panel of employers discussed merits of the training received by students in preparing them for business.

The discussion before the Salem Credit association was opened by Miss Helen Benson, credit manager of Doolittle's service station.

"We should go to the schools," Miss Benson asserted, "and point out what we don't want to see." Then she caustically dismissed typical bobby soxers and current high school "fashions" with the comment that "I won't even talk to someone with purple lipstick."

Her remarks were seconded by both men and women on the credit panel. A proposal that suggestions be made to the Salem school board relative to student training was presented to the meeting.

The state employment service was also subject to the searching attack of the various speakers.

The attitude of the group with reference to the state agency was summarized by one speaker who explained:

"I don't believe in calling the state employment office. You just get yourself in for a lot of work and trouble and the people they send never measure up to qualifications."

In specific terms, the panel wanted potential employes to be able to spell, to know grade school arithmetic, to dress more like "business women" and be willing to work and learn.
