WAY AND BUCKLEY
WAYE FOND ADIEU

(Installment XXIII)
There was a dense crowd in the groun of the house.

Mr. Massoula's henchmen moved through it bearing salad bowls filled with confettl. At least they were distributing something inexpensive for the moment. People were self-consciously grabbing handfuls, most of which they immediately let slip hrough their fingers to the floor.

Weryone was watching the stairs sensely as if they expected a couple of whippets to come streaking down and out the door before they could strength of the balls of damp paper a their clenched fists.

This was the scene that Mr. Banks and visualised so often during the sit twenty-five years; the moment hen his first-born would come saming down a broad staircase on its airm of a muscle-bound stranging to the first born would come is ming down a broad staircase on its airm of a muscle-bound stranging to the final bottle.

The last guest had gone. The last damp hand had been wrong the first born of the popole's staircase.
