Moore Sees U. S. At Crossroads

The half way mark in the 20th century finds us half way to some place, but where? Asked Rev. Brooks Moore, pastor of the First Methodist church, as he delivered a timely talk to members of the Salem Lions club Thursday noon.

And while the speaker did not answer the question he propounded, he gave his audience considerable food for thought. Rev. Moore delved into the question from the standpoint of the nation. He quoted General Omar Bradley as saying that "we know more about war than peace and more about killing than living."

This generation knows how to destroy and is making an effort to learn how to build, stated Rev. Moore. From the materialistic standpoint the country is tops in science but science needs a conscience for control.

Admitting that he is about the "soberest optimist" one can find, Dr. Moore believes there is a growing sense of responsibility on the part of the American people as they reach the "cross roads of history."

Encouraging signs pointed out by the speaker are the United Nations organization and the tendency on the part of the people to books that "deal with power greater than man's power."

The lawmen met Wednesday afternoon at the Salem city hall to study about laboratory aids in criminal investigation. The complete course will cover several other phases of police work.

One of the instructors who appeared before the group was Jack H. Barnes, assistant director of the state police crime detection laboratory at the University of Oregon medical school in Portland.

Other courses will be held in cities throughout the state. The program is sponsored by the Oregon Association of City Police officers, the Oregon State Sheriff's association.
