Atlantic fleet headquarters reported today the blasts will occur at mid-day at low tide and are not expected to free the 15,000-ton ship.

A fleet spokesman said charges equal to about 75 pounds of TNT will be placed about 50 feet from the ship on either beam. The explosives will be lowered into 10-foot deep holes dug in the bay bottom. Shock saves which will be set up in the water by the ex-plosives, the spokesman said, are designed to do two things:

(2) To help the ship break contact with the sand.

To emphasize the "small pota-to" nature of the 150 pounds of explosives, the spokesman com-pared this charge with the 350-pounds and 500-pound depth charges the United States navy used in World War II. The charges will be exploded separately, the charge on the starboard (or right) side of the
