Smart Teen-Agers Eat Breakfast

A friendly atmosphere and the right foods go hand in hand at the breakfast table when it comes to the development of healthy bodies and sparkling personalities. These teens are starting the day with a menu of sliced bananas in orange juice, a choice of puffed rice, crisp corn cereal, or wheat flakes, hot biscuits and butter, with milk to drink.

All of us think about our looks at least part of the time. Whether it's shining hair, a clear skin, lots of pep, a healthy body, or a friendly outlook, they're all the basis of a healthy personality. Take a look at the popular students at school. They're successful in their studies, and getting along with people.

How do they do it, you ask? They know that beauty and good looks are an inside job. The food you eat is one of the first things to consider in building and keeping a healthy body and mind. Take the food you eat at the first meal of the day, for example. You can improve your smartness and your sharpness by improving your breakfast habits.

We know of one nutrition experiment in which young people who ate well-balanced meals for one year showed remarkable improvement in their general health. Much of the improvement came because of better breakfasts. Poor skin conditions cleared up, tiredness and nervousness disappeared, colds decreased, growth improved.

Here's a pattern for breakfast that can be used as the basis for your daily morning menu. It's a meal of fruit, cereal, milk, bread and butter. While average servings of these foods are adequate for most people, teenagers need to increase the portions in the morning menu or add eggs, breakfast meats, waffles or pancakes.

Winter-Into-Spring Hairstyles

The absence of any definite part in the hair is the main feature of the unusual winter-into-spring hairstyles introduced by the hair fashion council style consultants for the National Hairdressers and Cosmetologists association, as an altogether new and flattering way to wear your short locks.

These "part-less" hairstyles emphasize the smooth femininity of the current short hair trend as opposed to the shingled and mannish crops of the twenties. Designed with close-to-the-head lines that are infinitely more flattering and wearable, the generous use of waves is the keynote of these new hairstyles which set off the loveliness of the head itself. One of the nicest things about them is the fact that they stay in faultless order from one beauty salon visit to another.

Realizing that most women want to look their prettiest at all times, the hair fashion council has a few suggestions for achieving and maintaining the chic of the top of your head. First, carefully cut hair is the most important basis for any new coiffure. It should be shaped and shortened to remove the bulk and give the proper complementary length for your particular features and neck. Secondly, a good professional permanent is necessary, unless your hair is naturally wavy, to prepare your hair for its clinging role in back and all around. These are both jobs for experts and the woman who realizes this looks the part of the well-groomed woman.

Three suggested "part-less" hairstyles have been created by the hair fashion council for this season's wearing. One is for gala formal affairs, another is for the sophisticated young career girl, and the third is a graceful style for the more mature woman. The hair fashion council calls attention to the fact that these new styles, with head-conforming lines, are a perfect base for all of the new deep-down millinery, so popular this year and the favorite of most spring collections.

Making the most of after-dark glamor, an enchanting "part-less" coiffure, aptly titled "Romance Bound," has been designed for formal evening wear. Smoothly swept across the head from right to left, the hair carries a deep wave imprint at the left and frothy heights in back on that same side. The top smoothness breaks over the forehead into a gay, feathery bang, giving this evening confection a strikingly different note that captures the attention.

"Sophisticated Symmetry" is the council's name for the "part-less" hairstyle designed for the career girl who prefers a softly flattering hairstyle without severity of line. Deeply waved sides frame the face while the smooth band of hair down the center, which widens as it extends from forehead to crown and down the back, gives perfect balance to this style.

For the older woman who is seeking the flattering softness of good lines, the council offers "Curves Ahead," another "part-less" design. A hairdo practical and becoming at one and the same time, it falls into place at the merest touch of brush and comb, looks well beneath a hat, and best of all, comes out of the hat in perfect order. Gracefully placed waves encircle the head except in the back where the crown is smooth down to the nape hair which curls ever so slightly upward.

Leon French was best man and ushers were Jack Graver, Beaverton; James Nelson, Silvertown; Victor Ockerman, Portland; Glen Graver, Sheridan, all cousins of the bride and bridegroom, and Newton Cox, Sheridan.

Mrs. Allan Brown sang, accompanied by Mrs. Ida Lewis, who also played the wedding marches.

The church was decorated with white chrysanthemums and yellow daffodils. Candles were lighted by Wallace Grevel and Newton Cox. Solveig Magnuson was junior bridesmaid and John Brandt acted as ring bearer.

The reception was held in the Dallas Chamber of Commerce rooms. Pouring were Mrs. Otto Heider and Mrs. George Marrs. Mrs. E. A. Brandt and Mrs. Fred Burgess served the brides cake, assisted by Lorraine Chamberlain, Frances Gutbrod, Sharon Brandt and Sally Brandt. Miss Dagman Griser played incidental music during the reception.
