Cities on Willamette Act To Meet Sanitary Deadline

Engineers throughout the state are proceeding with plans and specifications for sewerage systems in the Willamette valley in order to meet the January 1, 1953 deadline for the start of construction ordered by the state sanitary authority, according to the Daily Journal of Commerce, Portland.

Five firms manufacturing pulp and paper will appear before the sanitary authority's hearing in Portland February 15, following which the authority experts will make decisions on the problems.

A check of cities throughout the state includes: Salem—Cunningham & Associates are preparing working drawings for the sewerage system, which will be expanded to serve West Salem. Date of construction is indefinite.

Albany—Preliminary plans have been completed by Cornell, Howland, Hayes & Merryfield, consulting engineers of Corvallis. The engineers expect to start working drawings this fall.

Corvallis—Work was started on the system last year with additional work to be done each year until the system is completed, probably in 1954. The same firm as in charge of the Albany work is preparing working drawings as the project progresses.

Eugene and Springfield—The same firm will submit a report in March on the feasibility of a proposal to form a joint municipal sewerage district including outlying districts. Further planning awaits the outcome of the survey.

Lebanon—Same firm has completed preliminary plans. Funds are not available and date of construction indefinite.

McMinnville—Working drawings being prepared by same firm. Date of construction indefinite but will probably be this year.

Hilliard Object Lesson In Economy of Living

New York, Feb. 7 (AP)—Housewives who nag their husbands for more money for the food budget could take a lesson today from city welfare commissioner Raymond M. Hilliard.

The $15,000-a-year commissioner kept his own family of six on a food budget of $95.96 last month—about 52 cents a day for each person.

Hilliard conducted the experiment to prove that a recent seven per cent cut in the individual food allowances for persons on relief was justified.

The commissioner pointed out that his family of six would have received $124.50 for food if they had been on relief—and thus would have saved $28.54.

He admitted, however, that the money saved would have gone for cigars and other items not included in the food budget.

Mrs. Mary Hilliard, his wife, said she got along fine on the budget by buying cheaper cuts of meat.

Today's Woman Had Better Forget the 'Flapper' Look

By JOHN ROSENBERG

New York, Feb. 7 (AP)—Today's woman had better forget the "flapper" look.

Her feet are too big; her neck is too long; her hips are too wide, and her shoulders are too square.

Besides, the men don't like it. So advised beauty expert Ann Delafield today.

Miss Delafield, director of the Richard Hudnut beauty salon and the Du Barry success school, said the flapper era fad of the 1920's was becoming "rampant." She said 80 of every 100 women had succumbed to the boyish figure and the mannish hairdo.

That, she said, is bad.

"In the first place," she said, "the woman of today cannot hope to look like the flapper of the 20's. They are dainty, small-boned. Today's woman is much bigger. The woman of the 20s looked horrible enough. Today, with bigger feet, hips, shoulders, busts and a longer neck, she looks worse."

"Once women start looking like men, they start acting like them. They select mannish looking suits, wear flat heels. In short, they lose their femininity."

Miss Delafield, who claimed 1,000,000 home-course pupils, said she received hundreds of letters from husbands throughout the nation, begging her not to be swayed by the trend and to stick to "curves and curls."

"The pleas were so strong," Miss Delafield said, "that I was prompted to investigate the matter a little further. I polled a score of prominent men to learn what they thought the woman of tomorrow should look like."

The men, according to Miss Delafield, said the woman of the future should look like Model Pat Reed of Kansas City, who is 5'6" tall, weighs 135 pounds, has a 35" bust, 23" waist and is 34" at the hips. She also has blue-green eyes and medium-length red hair.

"That's the type of girl I'm going to advocate," Miss Delafield said, "no matter what the fashion experts say. After all, it's more important for women to suit the men than other women."
