Oregon Played Significant Role in Lincoln's Career

By BEN MAXWELL

Oregon played a significant role in the career of Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday is celebrated Sunday.

In a letter dated September 27, 1849 Lincoln refused to consider an appointment as governor for Oregon. It was hard decision. As governor for the Territory he would be in line for the U. S. senate when state-thood was achieved. But the position was not to his taste. Perhaps it was not to Mrs Lincoln's taste. She had had enough of frontier life, was opposed to going to the Pacific coast and would hear nothing of it.

Again, in 1860, the republi-

Again, in 1860, the republican national convention was held at the Wigwam in Chicago. Lincoln was a candidate for the presidential nomination. But his namination was by no means as-was his.

Immediately after the first gun was fired upon Fort Sumpter, April 12, 1861, Lincoln is sued an appeal for 75,000 volunteers. This notice reached Oregon May 11. Governor John Whiteaker did not respond. He left that the Confederacy could never be defeated. Besides, Oregon was too far from the scene of conflict to be too much cenered.

Nor did the Emancipation Proclamation meet with universal favor in Oregon. The temper of the state was about as hos-

Many staunch supporters of Lincoln and the North thought it might be wiser to remain at home and keep a close eye on local secessionists and their petuated in Oregon by the hamdreams of a Pacific Republic along with that dubious fraternity Knights of the Golden Circle.

Name of the sixteenth president of the United States is perlevated in Oregon by the hamdream of a Pacific Republic and by Lincoln county, created by act of the Legislature February 20, 1893.

David Watson Craig, proprietor of the Salem Argus from 1858 to 1863, studied law in Encoln and Herndon's law office at Springfield, Illinois and when he took the bar examination Lincoln was one of his examiners. D. W. Craig was the father of F. Sumpter Craig, an oldtime Salem newspaper man and some for the unit's treasury.
