Another new and surprising post-war discovery indicates that certain substances taken internally will stimulate the growth of hair on the scalp. SAMSONADE, previously sold merely as a wholesome appetizer, contains these substances and has produced a sharp increase in hair growth in approximately 80% of its recent users.

This is one more instance of the widespread gains in medical and biological knowledge in the last few years. The re-search on which this discovery is based was only completed in: December, 1949. It is strictly new, and in line with the prin-ciple that hair growth depends mainly on internal body chem-
