Hollywood's No. 1 Bachelor Says Girls Are Gold-diggers

By VIRGINIA MacPHERSON
(United Press Hollywood Correspondent)

Hollywood, April 13 (U.P.)—Scott Brady, Hollywood's No. 1 bachelor, said today most of the town's single girls are "double-crossing, tinsel-covered gold diggers."

"They don't go out with a man because they like him," he said. "They go out with anybody they think'll do them some good."

And if he sounds bitter, said the man a group of models named recently as the movies' top husband-material, it's because he is.

"I've been burned, honey," he muttered. "I've been burned plenty!"

He's still scorched from the treatment he got from a gal he was "really gone on."

"She called up and I wasn't in," Brady said. "But a pal of mine answered. He got to talking to her. After a few minutes he asked her what she was doing that evening—and bam! He had a date—just like that—with my girl!"

"When I heard about it I was so mad I called up about a dozen girls I know pretty well. I told 'em I was somebody else—and got dates without any trouble at all. Then I told 'em who I really was and slammed down the receiver."

What he's looking for, Brady said, is a regular girl—one who laughs out loud at the movies.

"None of these bright young things will give out with a real good belly-laugh," he said. "They just titter. They don't act natural."

"Golly, if they're even afraid to laugh a guy gets to wondering how many other inhibitions they're squashing."

"And what's the routine answer when you ask a girl to a party? She wants to know 'who's going to be there?' Heck, I'm gonna take her. That oughta be enough."

"But if I mention a big producer's name, wow! She's even ready on time... with bells on... And she's the last to leave. That disgusts me. If a girl really has talent she doesn't have to be nice to producers to get there."

"And how about all these young girls who marry rich, old men? Don't tell me that's love!"

No, siree, girls, this bachelor's not about to get engaged yet. He has just one comment for that possibility:

"Ugh!"

King George May Have to Dig Deeper to Aid Some of His Kin

(Editor's note: Britain's taxes are the highest in the world. The labor government is keeping them that way, not only to raise money for its socialist program, but to curb inflation and to further narrow the gap between the once great hereditary incomes of old aristocracy and the pittance once paid the British working man. The following dispatch tells how even the royal family is feeling the economic pinch.)

(United Press Correspondent)

London, April 13 (U.P.)—King George will probably have to dig deeper into his public and private purses to help his impoverished relatives after the labor government introduces its new budget April 18.

There doesn't seem much chance that Britain's socialist rulers will let up on their avowed goals of redistributing the national wealth.

Already the king's sister, the princess royal, has had to open her home to the public at 30 cents admission to get enough money to pay her taxes.

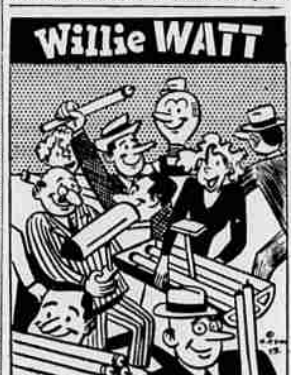

Both the Duke of Windsor, brother of the king, and the Duchess of Kent, the king's sister-in-law, could use a little help. Although neither is broke or even badly bent by ordinary standards, they would find some extra cash helpful in living in the style to which they are accustomed.

and its public and private fortunes both are huge.

The king pays no income tax on the state funds allotted him, about $1,148,000 a year under the current rate of exchange. This deal was arranged by George III, who lost the American colonies.

The king, however, voluntarily pays an income tax on his vast private investments.

When the Duke of Windsor abandoned the throne in 1937 for love of American Wallis Simpson, he was given an annual allowance by the king of 25,000 pounds. This was worth more than $100,000 a year then in 1937 but devaluation of the pound and the rise in living costs has almost halved its value.

The Duchess of Kent, widow of the king's youngest brother, has no state allowance. Recently she sold many personal possessions. They included a picture which her late husband had given her as a wedding present. The handsome 42-year-old duchess has a small personal income and a moderate amount from her husband's estate, but she doesn't find it easy to maintain her status as one of the world's best dressed women and raise a son who is seventh in succession to the throne.

However, if she faced any real crisis, the king undoubtedly would help her as he already assists his cousins and other relatives whose thrones have gone or whose fortunes have dwindled away. For the financial position of the house of Windsor alone is impregnable.

lie funds are Dowager Queen Mary, $196,000 a year; Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh, $140,000 a year; the Duke of Gloucester, the king's brother, $98,000 a year, and the princess royal, $16,800 a year.

All pay taxes, but are allowed special deductions which enable them to keep about 85 percent of the grants.

King George pays all expenses run up by his younger daughter, Princess Margaret, but she will be given an independent income of $16,800 a year from public funds starting on her 21st birthday Aug. 21, 1951.
