Assistant State's Attorney Robert Calkins said the boys had signed statements that they fatally shot Benjamin Pannier as he walked into his farm home Wednesday. The boys related in their statement, Calkins said, they took Pannier's wallet containing $43 and dragged his body to his barn and covered it with hay. Pannier's body was found by police after they had found his car abandoned on a highway.

All of those taken to the hospital were released after treatment for cuts and bruises.

The railroad said in a statement that "for some reason" the eight-car 5:14 p.m. local bound from Boston to New Bedford failed to stop for a red warning fuse dropped by the 5:08 p.m. train headed for Providence, R.I., and plowed into its rear.

The Providence train, the road said, had dropped the fuse after stopping for a red signal on one of the three main line tracks in the Roxbury district.
