WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY

This week-end is marked with a big red circle on many a coed's social calendar for it is again time for the annual fraternity spring formal. Both Beta Theta Pi and Phi Delta Theta have chosen Saturday for their respective affairs.

Beta has planned a formal banquet at the chapter house preceding the dance. The dinner will be served buffet style and the guests will sit at small tables for four. The dance itself will be held at the No-Name Ballroom, which is to be decorated with replicas of the fraternity crest and flowers. Corsages are in order for the affair and the coeds will also receive favors of gold gracielets adorned with the fraternity crest. The entire evening has been planned in honor of the graduating seniors.

The Phi Dels will transform their chapter house into an African jungle in their interpretation of the theme, "Cannibal Kingdom." Members and their dates will enter the chapter house through the mouth of a huge cannibal king guarding the doorway. The interior of the "jungle" will feature thatched huts, drawings of mountains on the walls, and spears and shields. And it is rumored that the mighty Phi hope to add a few "dried heads" to the decorations to lend the party a distinct atmosphere. Programs for the evening are to be in blue-white leather with the fraternity crest in gold on the front. Each guest will be given a small black and white dog as a favor.

Wednesday was a night of several firesides, all of them original in idea and apparently enjoyed by all. Baxter hall entertained the Chi Omegas in a Hawaiian setting. The evening's entertainment featured films of Hawaii, piano selections by Dick Gaw, songs of the sea by Carl Blanes, and the presentation of leis to the sorority president and vice-president by Chuck Martin, Baxter hall president. Hawaiian punch was served for refreshments, and the evening ended in dancing.

Pi Beta Phi and Sigma Epsilon held an exchange dinner preceding the fireside sponsored by the SAE's. Everyone was dressed very informally — the fellas in jeans and plaid shirts and the gals in pedal pushers. The real fun began with a treasure hunt—and what treasures they found! Later on, the campus tennis court was changed into a ballroom and many of the group sang around a campfire. Beta Theta Pi and Lausanne hall, under the chairmanship of Phil Hammond and Betty Jean Mullin, respectively, cooperated in their party. Both groups thoroughly enjoyed the songs of a trio composed of Joan Dingman, Jane Thurston and Gay Simons, the whistling of Harriet Aller, a trombone duet by Wes Hedeon and Dick Cole, and an "interesting" reading as rendered by Don Carpenter.

And even without the dances and firesides, the campus is still buzzing with activity. May weekend festivities are just around the corner and even closer still is the Panhellenic workshop for Willamette, University of Oregon, and Oregon State, for which Willamette is host next weekend, April 29.

YOUR MAGIC WAND

It isn't what you HAVE in your room that determines its individuality and livability, it's what you DO with what you have. We've all seen rooms that were filled with costly furnishings, yet were dull and uninteresting.

It's small touches... like a dramatic splash of color; an unusual arrangement of accessories to give an element of surprise; the way you combine textures and fabrics; an impish miniature peeping from an unexpected spot; all the little individual touches that are YOU bring that indefinable something to your room.

An ingenious touch has been employed in the room sketched above. A bamboo curtain used edgewise stands between the davenport and tea cart giving the living and dining functions in the room a separate setting, at the same time preserving the illusion of space and allowing an uninterupted sweep of light and ventilation.

Painted a different harmonizing color on each side, it offers color variety and dramatic interest.

The tea cart opens to a sizable table for dining, is mobile for informal serving, perfect for buffet supper, and fits cozily into small space. The three hanging shelves on opposite wall keep dishes within reach, and the casual, scattered china arrangement adds to the decorative theme.
