

Armor-Piercing Rockets to Go To Aid of Yank Fliers in Korea

By CHARLES CORDRY
(United Press Aviation Writer)

An American Air Base, Japan, July 13 (UP)—New types of armor-piercing rockets will be added soon to the armament of American combat planes in the Korean war.

Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, U. S. air force chief of staff, disclosed this today in an exclusive interview with the United Press after he made a flying trip to several American air bases in Korea and Japan.

Fifth air force pilots had complained yesterday that their five-inch rockets were ineffective against what they said were 60-ton Russian-built tanks used by the North Koreans.

Urges Reserves, Guard to Duty

Vandenberg's visit gave an obvious lift to pilots and ground crews, especially at the advanced Korean base where F-51 Mustangs are being operated on what appears a shoestring basis.

This correspondent accompanied Vandenberg, Maj. Gen. Earle E. Partridge, commander of the Fifth air force, and other high air force officers on their flight in a C-47 transport.

Vandenberg and Partridge assured the men at the Korean base that reinforcements are on the way.

Maj. Dean Hess of Marietta, O., commanding fighter operations at the base, said each of his planes was flying up to three missions a day.

Hess formerly was with the Ninth air force, Vandenberg's outfit in World War II.

"We did it before," Hess said. "We'll do it again."

Vandenberg watched fighter and transport operations at another base in Japan after a zero ceiling stymied his efforts to land at a second Korean air field.

Some of these difficulties will be overcome, Vandenberg said, with the arrival of new equipment.

This will include electronic aids of all kinds and "new discoveries in the rocket field." He said these are new types of armor-piercing rockets and are on their way from the United States.

Vandenberg said fighter forays have had a great deal to do with the relatively slow progress of the North Koreans in the last few days.

He quoted Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, commander of the Eighth army, as saying that the Reds would have been much farther along had it not been for the air force operations.

As for the F-80, Vandenberg said the pilots have a feeling of security in it because of its demonstrated ability to absorb battle damage and act as a stable platform for rockets and guns.

Vandenberg said fire bombs again were proving effective against tanks and bridges and that the five-inch rockets carried on F-80s are knocking out bridges of the type which used to require several medium bombers to destroy.

Referring to an impending set-up of Korea-based fighter operations, Vandenberg said the communists soon would feel the weight of many more flights daily.

The recommendation was part of what Johnson called a "minimum" program for the defense of the nation.

The armed services committee member told the senate that never before has the United States "been in such grave peril as it is at this moment."

Johnson said the fighting in Korea has demonstrated that the nation is seriously outnumbered by its enemies. He said American troops are being sent to battle "with one arm tied behind their backs."

"Our army divisions simply do not have the number of battalions they need to function efficiently and economically in combat," he said.

Johnson's proposals reflected increasing concern in congress over the Korean conflict and the possibility that it might turn into a long and perhaps greater war.

Washington, July 13 (AP)—Senator Lyndon Johnson (D., Tex.) today had urged calling all national guard units and organized paid military reserves to active duty immediately.

He estimated this would provide 832,028 additional men for the army, navy, air corps and marines.
