Sergeant Proves to Be Hero At Throttle of Escape Train

By PETER KALISCHER

With American forces at the Taejon front, July 1 (U.P.) — Staff Sgt. Elmo Smallwood got himself a new name today — Casey Jones — on his first run at the throttle of the old 219.

Five American soldiers owe their lives to Smallwood.

He stepped across the riddled bodies of a Korean fireman and a critically wounded engineer to drive a rescue train out of blazing Taejon.

Smallwood headed a quartermaster rescue train into Taejon, which was already reported in enemy hands, late yesterday afternoon. He wanted to bring out the wounded of the embattled 34th regiment, of which he was a veteran throughout World War II.

• • •

The train, with the Korean engineer at the controls, nosed into the Taejon yard. The engineer saw that the track was ripped up 100 yards ahead. He started the train back.

"Then all hell broke loose," Smallwood said. "The North Koreans had been lying in ambush on both sides of the track. They opened up on us with two machineguns, mortar fire, and about 10 rifles."

Smallwood, whose home is at Lexington, Ky. had been lying on top of the train. He climbed into the cab and found the fireman riddled with bullets which had pierced the steel guard. The fireman's body was leaning against the red hot firebox and was ablaze. The engineer had been critically wounded by the same burst.

• • •

Smallwood, who is in the bantamweight class, puled the dead fireman aside and grabbed the throttle.

"It was the first time I ever ran a train, but no one else was there to do it," he said.

A Korean interpreter was cowering under the box in the cab, too terrified even to get out of the way.

To make matters worse, the train's 50 caliber machineguns, manned by Cpl. James McCallum of Albion, Mich., atop the cars, were jammed. McCallum lay flat with four other GI's.

In the cab, Smallwood got going in reverse. He headed the three-car train for a tunnel.

Mortar shells fell 25 feet behind as he picked up speed.

With machineguns barking and rifle bullets whistling Smallwood drove old 219 through the tunnel and south to safety.

Wheat gained more than 7 cents at times, making the largest one day advance since outbreak of fighting in Korea. More moderate advances were scored by corn, oats and rye.

Wheat closed 6⅝ to 7 cents higher, July $2.33⅝-¾; corn was 1⅝-2⅝ higher, July $1.55¼; oats were 1⅝-1 higher, July 83¼-84¼; rye was 3¾-5½ higher, July $1.43; soybeans were ¼ lower to 10 cents higher, July $3.17½-$3.15; and lard was 50 to 60 cents a hundred pounds higher, July $14.00.

Stock Market

New York, July 21 (AP)—Late demand for railroad stocks helped prop the entire market today.

Carriers closed with gains running to more than $2 a share.

Advances of around $1 a share or less were in a majority elsewhere. A good-sized sprinkling of stocks ended with minor losses.

Auto issues were notably reluctant to move up.

The market spent most of the day looking for a direction.

Turnover was heavy throughout with sales in the neighborhood of 2,700,000 shares for the full session.

Today's spotty rise failed by a wide distance to measure up to the advances of the past three days.

On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday the market value of all stocks listed on the exchange increased by roughly $3,500,000,000. The advance nearly cut in half the severe losses taken after our intervention in Korea at the end of June.
