Bateson Not Enamored with Federal Bureau Methods

"It's nothing but a sticky mass of muddle-headed irresponsibility!" That was the definition of federal bureaucracy given Wednesday to members of the Salem Exchange club, not by an outsider, but from one who could speak from experience—Cornelius Bateson, candidate for the state senate on the democratic ticket and former head of the five-county census bureau office in Salem.

Bateson struck out against bureaucracy as something "I'd like to avoid" in a talk which gave his views on the economic future of Marion county. He emphasized that something positive should be done to encourage enterprise and opportunity, especially for the small businessman and farmer. Tying his views in with facts on Marion county, Bateson said he estimated that 15 per cent of the county's 100,000 plus population was engaged directly in agriculture. He pointed out, however, that the agricultural frontier of the county was all but gone.

"With diminishing opportunity comes an increased cry for security—something which can never be had. It can be wiped out by inflation or a change of government policy," Bateson said. He claimed, however, that opportunity on Marion county's farms could be increased by development of an irrigated economy. He also suggested that small farmers and businessmen could be aided by tax laws which would permit them to build capital reserves.

It was the second time within as many weeks that the Exchange club heard from democratic party speakers—both of whom strayed from the party line to shake a verbal finger at national practice. The first was Luis Martine-Lally, Marion county democratic central committee chairman, who said he didn't care whether Truman was elected again or not. His talk was aimed at sponsoring the principles of the two-party system.

"If we, as citizens, do not contribute voluntarily to support of these agencies, the services they perform must be assumed by the government and supported by taxation. "Voluntary private contributions is the best method and the democratic way to handle this obligation to the community." The quota for automotive and transportation is $10,700.

Gates—At the last meeting of the city council plans were made to open several streets, which will be graded and graveled. This will give access to a number of homes that are at this time cut off from the main streets. The new street through the Park and Davis addition will be graded and graveled. Application has been made to the Mountain States Power company for the installation of a number of street lights which will be placed at the most important points.

Waterloo Only Wants Traffic Protection

Lebanon—Seeking to reactivate Waterloo's incorporated status of 1893, a mass meeting last Friday night brought out most of the village's adult citizens, to hear their problems outlined by Kenneth Wilshire, Lebanon attorney. Maps of Waterloo were shown defining the city limits. The old city charter calls for a secretary-recorder who would also serve as police magistrate, a town marshal and a city council of five members, one of whom would be elected as mayor by the council.

The little city is entitled to receive rebates from several tax funds aside from any they might levy on themselves, it was pointed out. No new tax payments are planned, for Waterloo is interested only in securing traffic protection for its children without imposing an additional burden on its taxpayers.

Waterloos voted to continue their city project and the following committee was named to make further investigation and recommendation: Mrs. P. D. Shoemaker, Mrs. George Vawter, Ben Canaga, Mrs. Wayne Harvey and W. W. Ashlock. The committee will confer with County Engineer Banks to see what can be done about temporarily policing the highway through the town.

Chest Support Matter of Duty

"Each of us has a duty to share in creating in this community a wholesome environment in which to live, to work and to play," said Otto J. Wilson, son of the Otto J. Wilson company and co-chairman of the automotive and transportation division of the Salem Community Chest fund raising campaign. "I believe," he said, "each of us should have a vital interest in what the participating agencies do in making the children of our city better citizens, and in making Salem a more wholesome community."
