Renewal of seat subscriptions for the Portland symphony orchestra concert in Salem this winter are well ahead of last year, it is stated by the Salem Symphony society, indicating an increased interest in the series of three live concerts offered by this orchestra. The personal appearance of Ernest Bloch, conductor of the series, is being met with widespread enthusiasm.

Members of the ticket committee report that many purchasers remark that in the series of three live concerts, a Salem musician tells of an interesting experience in New York this summer. She was introduced to a famous English pianist, now teaching at Juilliard and lecturing on music in this country, with the remark that the Saltemic came from Oregon. "Oregon," the British woman repeated vaguely. Then with a flashing smile of recognition, "Ah, that is how it lives! Do you know him, by any chance?"

Mr. Bloch, a composer and conductor, is definitely putting Oregon on the musical map. Mr. Bloch spent the summer and autumn of 1949 in Europe, where he conducted the orchestra of La Scala in Milan, the Suisse Romande in Geneva and the London Philharmonic, among others. At the famous International Festival in Edinburgh he presented the world premiere of his new piano concerto, the highlight of the festival that season. In London he also made recordings in the London Gramophone.

All seats for the local concerts of the symphony are reserved, with three price levels available. Satisfaction with this arrangement is expressed by patrons, who find it convenient to avoid the necessity of an early arrival at the auditorium and the following wait for the program.

Orders for renewals of seats held by subscribers to the series last season will be received until October 31, at which time the general subscription program will be sold through Thursday, November 9, thus giving season ticket holders the first choice of seats. For Friday, November 10, through the day of the first concert, November 14, tickets for single concerts also will be sold.
