

HARM NICHOLS FINDS:

People in U. S. Still Practice 'Good Will Toward Men'

By HARMAN W. NICHOLS

Washington, Dec. 21 (AP)—I have evidence to prove that we still practice "good will toward men" in America.

In Washington, and elsewhere. Here in the capital, a group of auto supply firms has done a daring thing. Instead of passing out gifts to their customers like they used to, the outfits are taking the money and buying food and clothing for the needy.

John Carden, who runs a Washmobile concern, says that the idea started last year when a couple of companies decided to stretch their necks out.

"We put ourselves on a spot," he said. "You know that customers can run you into the red by taking their business someplace else."

But, surprisingly enough, it didn't work out that way.

The two firms last year sent their patrons cards instead of presents and explained what they were up to. The customers phoned and wrote in that they thought it was a swell idea.

This year, about a dozen other supply outfits have joined the parade. And a lot of customers, instead of expecting and getting gifts, are adding money and presents to the pool.

Another small group around town is quietly doing good by practicing the "do-unto-others" slogan. It's called, properly, "The Golden Rule" club.

It's an informal organization of six fellows and their wives who have palled around together since they were kids.

A couple of years ago, one member of the crowd ran across an invalid at Emergency hospital. He talked his friends into sponsoring a dance to raise money for the patient.

The dough rolled in. Not long after that, another member saw a piece in the papers about a little boy who was hurt in an auto smash-up. There was another benefit dance, and there have been many since.

A Christmas time approached, the folks put their heads together—plus all the money they could spare.

On Sunday night a few needy folks in Washington will get Christmas baskets.

In Durant, Okla., Miss Ora O'Riley, a native Choctaw Indian, has been working since 1939 on a worthy project she thought up all by herself.

"I want my home town to be the one city in the United States where a picture of Christ is displayed in every home," she wrote the United Press. "Also in every school, business office, and public building. This dream has almost come true."

Once Durant is 100 per cent for the idea, Miss O'Riley hopes that the thing spreads around the country.

"There should be something done to call our attention to what the occasion is," she said. "The season of the year has been commercialized until the real purpose of celebrating the birth of Christ is lost entirely."

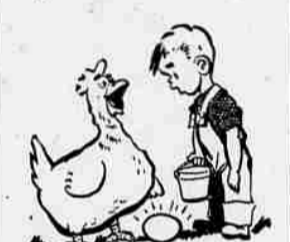

Miss O'Riley also thinks it would be swell if each town would sponsor a "Christ the Prince of Peace" Christmas parade.

"Then maybe some day in our time the world would have peace," the Indian woman said.

Storm Warnings on Oregon Coast Hoisted

Seattle, Dec. 21 (AP)—The weather bureau issued the following advisory warning today: "Southeast storm warnings hoisted 3:30 a.m. Tatoosh to Astoria, and small craft warnings south of Astoria to Cape Blanco, on the Strait of Juan de Fuca and inland waters of Washington. Southeast winds increasing to 35-45 mph Tatoosh to Astoria and 25-35 elsewhere this morning, shifting to southwest and diminishing this afternoon."
