CHAPTER 4

Lottie drew herself up. "Don't expect me to cook. I'm going now." "You can't, darling. We won't let you go. You have to help us picture in the wide world. Every time I see you I want to rub my eyes and say only the good Lord can understand how you belong to us. But I can't talk. I gotta run and talk Mulrooney out of the best grub in the store. Here's the hook, Florrie. Use it on her if she tries to run away. Come on, Tuffy. Off we go!"

She turned and vanished through the back door opening from the dining room into the hall. Joe stood rigid. Lottie came in and pushed by them to switch on the lights.

"What's the matter? You both look as if you'd seen a ghost." Joe turned and walked quickly through the door. Mrs. Monahan sank heavily into a chair. Lottie stared at her.

"What is the matter? Did you see a mouse or what?" "A rat, my girl. Go up to Mulrooney and send Pat home. Take Tuffy and get along with you." "What about the party?" "There ain't no party." She suddenly roared. "Do as I tell you and don't ask questions. Do it now."

Living to Be 125 Years Old Worries Editors

San Antonio, Tex., June 20.—The editor of Modern Pharmacy, George Bender, says it's possible that humans may one day expect to live to be 125 years old.

But, he said yesterday, the lining isn't all silver in this happy thought.

When he wanted to know, should a fellow who's going to live that long retire?
