Last Highway Route Threatened—Flood waters at left threatening to close the last highway route still in use across the Missouri river between Kansas City and the river's mouth above St. Louis are held back by sandbag barrier. The state highway department employes at work have used 25,000 sandbags in an effort to keep the route open. Bridge spanning river 30 miles upstream from its mouth is in far background. (AP Wirephoto)

Flooded Farm—Typical of the farms to be found in St. Charles county, Mo., this quiet farm home is completely surrounded by the flooding Missouri river. Approximately 25,000 acres of rich farm land have been inundated in the county leaving many homes cut off by water and reachable only by moat (note boat in front yard). The rapidly rising Mississippi river can be seen beyond the ridge of trees in the background. (Acme Telephoto)

Air Force Searching for a Gila Monster; You Got One?

BY HARMAN W. NICHOLS

Washington, July 21 (U.P.)—If you have a gila monster digging around your back yard, get in touch with the air force pronto.

Lack of same is costing us taxpayers money. The flier people need one to complete a film called "The Sky Is No Limit," at Holloman Air Force Base, Alamogordo, N. M.

The air force is used to looking up instead of down and can't trap one of the scaley critters whose native habitat is the desert region.

Charles Hundt, bushy-haired civilian who is directing the elaborate picture, said he's "suffered considerable delay" in filming the picture. Now he's even willing to settle for as lowly a creature that the gila is a bigger fellow — about two feet long when full grown.

• • •

The idea of the film is to show how the air force handles the delicate, but important, business of guiding missiles, jets and space ships through the stratosphere.

The monster is needed for a shot to give the impression of a pre-historic demon — just for contrast.

Hundt has scoured around but can't find anybody with a handy monster. A lot of zoos have 'em. But Charlie has to tell the keepers they are apt to lose an ugly pet if they loan it for the picture. It's supposed to slither out of the pitcure — prodded maybe, and likely would be smart enough not to come back.

• • •

The scene opens with a close-up of a gila-monster (or giant horned toad) and makes the little monster look like a big one. With trick camera work, it looks a little like a dinosaur. Then the monster disappears into nowhere and the cameras switch back to the sky.

The head photographer for the air force picture is Luigi de Angelis, who used to be an air force captain.

• • •

The idea of the picture is to show us down-stairs folks how, with knowledge of the upper air, we can make long-range weather forecasts if the fliers go high enough and look long enough.

It depicts the inner-workings of radio communications and how they can be so geared that the enemy never could intercept and figure out our system.

For security reasons, of course, the film will file away a few secrets.

• • •

A lot of universities have turned their experts loose in the program of upper air research, although none are connected directly with this particular picture. They are: University of Michigan, University of Denver, Rhode Island State college, Boston university, University of Utah, UCLA, Tufts college, Temple, and the University of Colorado.

Incidentally, Mr. Webster describes a gila monster as a rather sluggish fellow, with an ugly disposition. But maybe with a lasso or a hooked wire you could catch one and make the air force happy.

Good hunting.

Moving House Snafu Project For Lebanon

Lebanon—The moving of a sizeable old residence on east Sherman street to make way for a new structure was stalemated Friday morning when residents along the thoroughfare objected to the havoc wrought on their fine old trees which form a protective arch over the street.

Appeals to the council revealed the fact that no written permit had been issued for the operation and the structure came to a standstill, completely blocking the street. The city fathers went into a special session Friday afternoon to determine what should be done.

Residents in the forward path of march appeared with objections to any further progress lest new trees be damaged, and those living in the wake of the movement congregated to harrange against backtracking and additional breakage.

The possibility of demolishing the structure at its mid-street site was vetoed when motorists appeared to lament the blocking of the street.

The councilmen finally ordered the moving project to proceed, instructing the contractor to provide a crew of workmen to guard against undue damage to property and trees.

Safeway Rolls Back On Pork Products

Washington, July 21 (AP)—The office of price stabilization today announced a "voluntary" rollback of two cents a pound on most pork products sold by Safeway Stores, Inc.

The decision eliminates an increase which has been in effect for the last week, and affects Safeway groceries in 23 states.

OPS said Safeway had assumed that pork was one of the foods on which cost increases could be passed on to the public. Although OPS has no power to order rollbacks under the interim price law, officials conferred with the Safeway management and pointed out that pork is not on that list of commodities, the agency said.

The Safeway management promptly announced its decision to roll back the increase, OPS said.

Pork prices, although below parity, stood at 99 per cent of parity at the last report and are considered to have passed the parity figure by now. Ceilings may be applied at the parity level.

Four Weeks of This—Charlotte Fitch, 4-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. LaVerne Fitch, of Slater, Ia., will have to remain four weeks with her legs hoisted up like this. She suffered a broken leg, fractured ribs and cuts in an automobile accident. Student Nurse Lois Christiansen shown with her in a Des Moines hospital says the baby is a good patient. (AP Wirephoto)

Veteran Airlines Pilot Does Terrific Job in Emergency

Richmond, Va., July 21 (AP)—Everybody agreed the veteran pilot had done a terrific job—even the top brass.

One of the bosses just happened to be aboard yesterday when a storm-whipped airliner carrying 48 passengers and a crew of five was set down in a pasture near Richmond during a violent storm.

There were no injuries — thanks to skilful maneuvering of the four-engine New York-to-Miami Constellation during its belly landing by Capt. J. B. Armstrong, of Miami.

• • •

Said J. H. Brock, a vice president of Eastern Air Lines:

"I don't think any of the passengers knew we were going to make an emergency landing. And it was only after we had bumped into the field and had come to a stop that any of them knew anything was wrong.

Brock might have exaggerated a little. Many persons were aware of the turbulent weather and the trouble the plane was having after it passed Philidelphia. Most of them were airsick.

• • •

But there was no panic and little confusion as the big craft skimmed across the grass, ripped through a small fence and finally stopped near a wooded area on a large estate 15 miles southeast of here.

As flames licked up over a wing tip, the 53 persons aboard trooped out into the rain-drenched field. They shivered in a farm home as they waited for buses sent to the farm by the airline.

The fire didn't cause any damage. Airline officials said it was caused by friction when the plane tilted and the wing dragged.

"What a spot for a landing," shuddered Miss Judy Berke, a New York coed doing summer work at the University of Miami as she looked at the 200-yard path the plane had cut through the field.

"Thunder, lightning, wind and rain on a desolate field near some woods. It looked like an Alfred Hitchcock set . . . and that pilot . . . what a job he did."

• • •

What did Capt. Armstrong, a veteran of 20 years' flying, think about it?

"The vibration was so severe that we just kept on a straight course and headed for the first large field we saw. I had to bring it down. We couldn't stay up.

One passenger wasn't particularly impressed, one way or the other. That was navy torpedoman first class William Bell, of Greenwood, Mass. He grinned as he remarked:

"The first I knew was when the steward opened the door. I slept through the whole thing—didn't even wake up when we landed."

To which the veteran of navy submarine service added:

"The only thing I'm ever going up in again is a sub when it surfaces."
