Lebanon Organizes Group To Study School Problems

Lebanon—Ground work was laid at a meeting Tuesday night to organize a laymen's group to advise and assist Lebanon elementary and union high school boards in planning for future educational facilities essential to meet needs of a fast growing school population. The session was held at the high school. Decision to work with the boards followed an explanation by City Superintendent J. W. King in which he pointed out that while the districts now are at the closest point ever in meeting needs, enrollment is soaring and with it acute problems arising.

Newsboy Plays Basketball But Keeps Business

Lebanon—Remember the days of yesteryear when you had to write "I will not whisper any more" on the blackboard 100 times after school? Youthful business man, Jack Doughton, set himself just such a task in the interests of good business and continued happy public relations, for Jack, who daily carries the Capital Journal, wanted to play basketball after school. He saw to it first, however, that none of his customers became uneasy about "a little delay" in delivery.

Master Doughton sat himself down to the task of writing 73 messages, one for each customer, attaching them by sticking tape to each paper. They were neatly executed and there were no misspelled words. "Capital Journal will be a little late Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evenings," and signed his name.

"Took me just about all afternoon, but I guess I got everyone satisfied," he remarked.

Jack will be 11 in April.

Silver Falls Scouts In District Meeting
