BROKEN HEART MENDING

Life With Prince 'Unhappy,' Rita Hayworth's Friends Say

By ALINE MOSBY

Hollywood (AP) — Rita Hayworth is carrying a torch for her handsome prince, Aly Khan, but they won't reconcile because she knows their life together would make her unhappy, her friends believe.

The dashing son of a caliph is due to arrive in the cinema city Thursday for his first visit since he whisked the red-haired star off on a round-the-world courtship nearly four years ago.

He's courting his estranged princess, too.

• • •

Last trip, her "yes" transported the Brooklyn-born dancer to a headlined marriage May 27, 1949.

This time she'll say "no," friends say, because she knows their love isn't enough to hold a marriage together.

"When Rita returned to Hollywood alone a year ago last June, she was sad and quiet," one of her closest friends says.

"She was hurt—not so much for anything he had done, but just hurt that it didn't work out.

"There's no question she's carrying a torch for him. But she knows any relationship is impossible.

"When she started work on her comeback movie ('Affair in Trinidad'), she perked up. In a few months she should be over her broken heart."

• • •

Last week Rita indicated she never intends to go back to being Princess Margarita. She renewed the lease on her hilltop home for another year.

"She's now a serious, purposeful woman with a sense of responsibility and direction," the friend says. "She's a woman past 30 trying to rediscover her values in life."

• • •

Rita had a handsome prince, a fortune and life among the elite and titled. But like many a woman, she grew up to discover that what she thought was happiness and security, wasn't.

What happened in the royal love nest to break up one of the century's most publicized marriages?

For one thing, the one-time Spanish dancer found it difficult to be a princess.

Friends who visited their chateau on the French Riviera reported she looked "scared" at entertaining big-wigs and Moslem potentates.

She is a simple, modest person who felt ill at ease being a hostess. The 14 guest rooms at their chateau usually were filled, and Aly is the type who often brought 60 home to dinner.

• • •

"Rita, like most American women, expects some privacy in her home, and some time with her husband and children," the friend says.

Rita herself recently shrugged, "He can't help the way he is. That is how he's always lived. I happen to like to be alone with my family."

Community Chest Revival Voted at Silverton Meeting

Silverton — More than 50 citizens interested in the continuance of the local community chest project attended a special public meeting called at the Washington Irving building Chamber of Commerce rooms, with Olaf Paulson, Jr., presiding.

The session was placed before the general public because of the decision by the board of directors to discontinue more chest drives, as lack of public interest in making contributions was evident.

At the meeting a resume of the help accorded various organizations by the chest funds was given by the chairmen of different groups.

Speakers included Dr. Frank Furgerson of Salem, president of the Marion County Community Chest county wide set-up. He stated "I have seen and experienced life in many parts of the world, but the community chest meets the need and does it better and cheaper than any other organization that I know of."

Frank Lockman, field chest representative for the Oregon state community chest, told of state benefits from the project.

Mrs. C. B. Calkins and Mrs. Ed DeGuire told of being in homes where the chest funds had been beneficial for those really in need.

Johnny Clapp, Boy Scout representative put up the argument that chest funds for the Scout program had lessened or practically eliminated the former need for soliciting from citizens for funds.

Mrs. W. H. Woodard, Jr., gave the Girl Scout story of chest benefits. George Truman felt the need of chest funds for the recreational project in keeping boys at basketball play from idle mischief, both in winter and summer.

Mrs. Harry Sherwood served as secretary.

M. B. Ford told of the child welfare aids, locally, with 15 families, numbering 175 persons receiving temporary help, 18 pairs of shoes for children, three different bed-fast adults having the privilege of community chest wheel chairs.

At the close of the meeting the organization was considered of sufficient good to the community that the group voted a continuance.

New directors to be in charge are Robert E. Miller, C. A. Patterson, Dr. A. L. V. Smith, Wren E. Matheny, John Middlemiss, George Christenson, M. B. Ford, Mrs. C. B. Calkins, George Truman and Dr. R. A. Epeneter.

New Hearing on Pelton Sought

Prineville (AP) — A spokesman for Portland General Electric Company said Tuesday that the State Hydroelectric Commission will be asked Thursday to hold public hearings on licensing construction of Pelton Dam.

The commission recently denied PGE permission to build the power dam on the Deschutes River in Central Oregon on the ground that it might reduce Lower Columbia River fish runs.

Earlier the Federal Power Commission had authorized construction.

The Prineville-Crook County Chamber of Commerce Tuesday approved a resolution asking the state commission to reconsider the PGE application.
