

Route Signs For Emergency

A supply of emergency route signs, to be erected at specific locations in Marion county following any large-scale disaster, were delivered Monday to Wallace Wharton, county civil defense director.

The state civil defense agency has printed a detailed guide that shows where each sign is to be placed during an emergency, said Oscar Cutler of the engineering and heavy rescue service. All local civil defense directors will receive strip-maps of their areas and instructions on erecting the signs.

This is part of a comprehensive plan for controlling the movement of traffic during an emergency. Cutler said that hundreds of lives might depend on the ability to keep roads open, commenting that some nations that do not have one percent as many automobiles as America had some of the worst traffic jams in history during the recent war.

Major state highways—or primary roads—have been designated in northwest Oregon for emergency vehicles only. According to technicians who developed the traffic control plan, the main concern would be keeping inbound routes clear so that help can reach a disaster scene in the shortest possible time. Any organized evacuation, if required, would be handled on secondary, out-bound roads.

Identification placards will be placed on windshields of trucks and cars not readily recognizable as emergency vehicles. This would get them through police blockades quickly.

Graduate Student to Survey School District

Mrs. Blossom Woods, a former Cascade high school teacher and a graduate student in Willamette university, is planning an occupational survey of the Cascade union high school district.

This venture is in cooperation with the district high school board and Superintendent Urhammer.

The purpose of the survey is to obtain enough occupational information from the businesses in the district to supply vocational help and guidance for the high school students of Cascade and field trip studies by them and the grade schools.

Information will be obtained by interview.

Steve Anderson to Head Movement

New York (AP)—An Oregon attorney who resigned as vice president of the National Federation of Young Republican Clubs says formal announcement was made Monday of his appointment to head the new Republicans for Stevenson committee.

The attorney is Steve Anderson of Salem, Ore., who arrived here Sunday.

Anderson told newsmen at Idlewild airport that he was impressed by Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson, the democratic candidate for the presidency, and had become "quite distressed" over the campaign of his original choice, republican candidate Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Men Recruited for NavCad Program

Lt. D. E. Wilson and Chief H. L. Fisher, Naval Air Reserve training unit, Seattle, will be in the Salem area October 27 and 28 in connection with recruiting men for the NavCad program.

The two will be on the Willamette university campus October 27 and will be at the Oregon College of Education, Monmouth, October 28.

Chief Fisher, who Monday was in Salem en route from Corvallis to Portland, said that now the navy can enlist men in the NavCad in less than a week.
