CHAPTER 1
"But, Clay," Sally's eyes were frantic with fear. A stark, anguished fear that racked the smooth sweetness of her body and turned her soft lips into thin lines of agony.
"They'll hunt you down and hang you! Wayne Shepley has money! He has power! He has influence! He'll never forget that you killed his son. He'll never stop until you're dragged back to St. Louis and tried—and sentenced—and hanged!"
He nodded grimly—Clay Bennett Farrar, this lean dark man who had come back to Westport from Santa Fe less than an hour before with a fortune in gold in his wagon belt.
"He'd like to," he admitted. "May be I would, too, if I were in his place."
His face lightened a little, touched by the reckless sarcasm humor too many men had learned to fear. His fingers under her chin lifted her face to his, gently, reassuringly.
"But I'm not in his place, honey, and I can't spare the time for a good, old-fashioned hanging right now. I've got a lot of other things I'm planning to take care of first. One of them—" paced Gallic brain plucking and tugging at the fabric of the plan he had presented.

"It could be done," she admitted thoughtfully. "Yes, it could be done."
Her eyes widened in sudden alarm.
"But, Clay—you can't stay here until it's over! There'll never be a night or a day or an hour when you'll be safe!"
"I'll be safe. I'll be a thousand miles south of here in General Sam Houston's Republic of Texas—along with all the other outlaws who got across the Sabine or the Red River just two jumps ahead of the sheriff's posse. I'll be safe enough, Sally. But you have to stay here and see that it all works out."
"If you can't come back—"
