

Heart Catheter New Device

Among important new diagnostic instruments developed by research in the medical profession's continuing battle against diseases of the heart and circulatory system, is the cardiac catheter.

The catheter is a slender plastic tube which by a surgeon's delicate technique and manipulation can be guided through a patient's vein into the heart and lungs, where blood samples are taken and pressures recorded to aid in the diagnosis of heart abnormalities. Progress of the catheter on its way to the heart is checked by the physician, through a fluoroscope.

Use of the cardiac catheter is standard procedure for many heart cases at the University of Oregon medical school, Portland. Some dramatically successful results have been achieved.

The Oregon Heart association, from contributions to the annual Heart Fund campaigns, has given the medical school almost $25,000 during the past four years to purchase scientific equipment for the cardiovascular laboratory.

The association also maintains fellowships for advanced study and research into the causes, treatment and relief of diseases of the heart, which cause more deaths annually than all other leading causes of death combined. Educational programs for the public as well as for members of the medical profession, and community service for heart trouble victims, are also part of the association's over-all program.

Goal of the Oregon Heart Fund campaign this year, in areas not covered by United Fund and Community Chest drives, is $21,000. The campaign is sponsored by the Oregon State Life Underwriters association.

At the University of Oregon Medical School, Portland, Dr. William W. Hurst, assistant professor of physiology and medicine, is pictured inserting a cardiac catheter into a vein in a patient's left arm. The catheter will be delicately manipulated into the patient's heart and lungs as a diagnostic procedure.

Boys to Study Legislation

Silverton—Four Hi Y Silverton high school young men are spending the day (Saturday) in Eugene, making preparations for their part in the "Youth in Legislation" program. The meeting is at the University of Oregon Student Union building on the campus.

Raymond Riches and Howard Poppleton are to write bills of their own choosing, and Norman McCullough and Jim Black, are to serve as "lobbyists."

The bill by Riches is to place in the state educational code "Only three years of English instead of the present rule for four years."

Poppleton's bill that he has written, has to do with state highway four-way stop signals at road crossings, feeling that fewer stop signals at cross-roads is a safer arrangement.

This program for youth is a pre-legislative training, and is sponsored by the YMCA. The local Hi Y's will finance the trip to Eugene and Salem.

The activities are directed by Scotty Washburn.

Free Trade Advocates Bobbing Up Everywhere

New York (AP)—Free trade advocates popped up from many corners of the nation's business and industry this week.

Henry Ford II proposed scrapping all tariffs and import restrictions. His wasn't the first talk of free trade in recent months. But it drew more attention and comment.

It followed pretty much the policy statement of the Detroit Board of Commerce back last October.

It brought out a large number of advocates and it uncovered a few dissenters.

Meanwhile, price controls came off another long list of items, this time more than $6 billion dollars worth of business annually was represented on the list.

A clash over tax policy was in the making in Washington. President Eisenhower said tax cuts must be deferred until a balanced budget is in sight.

A house committee said tax reduction must be the first order of business in congress.

And industrial production rolled along at its familiar fast pace while retail merchants continued to report larger sales than a year ago.

"World trade is a two-way street," the Detroit statement said. "We cannot forever continue to sell if we refuse to buy."

Advocates of free trade want to remove all quota restrictions and repeal the "Buy America Act," which requires the bulk of government purchases come from United States firms regardless of price or quality.

Dun and Bradstreet, the business reporting service, said again that merchants with smaller volume of business were more numerous than in recent months although the overall figure was higher.

Traders on the New York Stock Exchange played it cautiously. Prices on the average wound up the week right where they were a week ago and two weeks ago.

Some animals and birds are colored in warm weather, but white during the winter.

Art Work Shop To Be Studied

An informal panel discussion has been planned to be held at the Oregon College of Education in Monmouth in the art department in Campbell hall at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 24, to determine the degree of public interest that would be evidenced in this area in plans for the development of a community art center to serve as a workshop and instruction center for both adults and children interested in art and creative handicrafts.

The public is invited to take part and representatives from civic organizations of Independence and Monmouth have been invited to attend the meeting to discuss organization and possible locations for such a project.

The discussion is being sponsored by the Luckiamute Art association, local group organized in 1951 by John Horns, member of the art staff of O.C.E. and this year led by Miss Helen Blumenstiel of Rt. 8, Salem, under auspices of the Adult Education Program.

Association members, who include Mrs. Henry Teiz, Mrs. Eugene Brown, Mrs. Lester Colgan, Miss Florence Beardley, Miss Peggy Hiatt, Miss Leonora Guinazzo and Miss Jessica Blackburn, will serve coffee and cookies during the evening.

Bombs Subject of Spillman Address

"And still the people come," states Evangelist Don Hiatt Spillman, after 16 weeks of meetings in Salem. "The evangelist is currently engaged in meetings nightly at Crystal Gardens except Wednesday and Saturday. Announcing his subject for Sunday night—"The Hell-Bomb and the End"—he went on to say that people everywhere are eager to hear a voice of hope in an age of fear and perplexity. He promised to answer the question, Will men destroy life on this planet through the use of atom and hydrogen bombs?"

The Spillman-Lyman mixed quartet will provide special music during the song service beginning at 7:20. Crystal Gardens is located at Ferry and Liberty streets. The public is welcome.

1190 Immunized in Smallpox Prevention
