Carol Curtis Pattern

Crocheted Rug. A beauty! Inexpensive, too. The yarn is big and works up quickly; the stitch is just plain, good old-fashioned crocheting! Size? It's 33 by 22 inches; make it larger if you want—just add more rows. But as it is, in its brilliant rows of Royal Blue, Light Blue, Rose, bright Green on a background of Ecru and a border of black, it just couldn't be more satisfactory. Big roses in center use colored yarns left over after you have finished the colored rows. Grand for bedroom or in front of fireplace.

Send 30c for the CROCHETED Oval Rug (Pattern No. 156) amounts of all colors specified, complete crocheting instructions detailed sketches of stitch and flowers, YOUR NAME, ADDRESS, PATTERN NUMBER to CAROL CURTIS, Capital Journal, 652 Mission street, San Francisco 5, Calif.

Patterns ready to fill orders immediately. For special handling of order via first class mail include an extra 5c per pattern.

It's Death, My Darling!

Chapter 16

"Peter," Bobby asked a little later when we were alone, "why didn't you want me to tell the sheriff about seeing Uncle Raoul with the sword last night?"

I didn't know myself precisely why, so I invented a reason.

"Well, for one thing," I said, "we can't be absolutely sure it was the sword he was carrying when we saw him. We only saw the moonlight glint for a second on something metallic. It might have been a cane with a gold or silver head. Besides, Beau had already said that Uncle Raoul had probably taken it."

That appeared to satisfy her, but only for a minute. Then she found something else to worry about.

"You don't suppose," she began apprehensively, "that after we saw him go down the drive he never came back again?"

"Bobby Brennon!" I exclaimed. "You've got more weird imagination than a Hollywood director! Of course he came back again. He probably got up early and went for a walk just as Uncle Bountiful suggested."

Lewis Haye came in from the gallery in time to overhear my last remark.

"What's the matter?" he inquired. "Is Mr. Raoul lost?"

"Lost, strayed, or stolen," I replied. "Probably only strayed."

He smiled briefly.

"By the way," he observed, "I thought I saw the sheriff leaving a little while ago. No—er—unpleasant complications about the inquest, I hope?"

"He came to ask about some things he found in Claude's pockets," Bobby explained, "and to get Colonel Dumont's sword for the inquest. Only the sword's gone along with Uncle Raoul."

He looked momentarily startled at that. Then his expression cleared.

"Oh, you mean the sword's missing, too?" he asked. "Well, I imagine both it and Mr. Raoul will turn up sooner or later." Then he went on to the dining room to get his breakfast.

But mid morning came, and Uncle Raoul failed to come with it. Lee was now definitely worried; and around half past ten, he and the other men started out to look for him. They didn't say that was what they were going to do, but they didn't deceive anybody unless it was Aunt Delphine, who had mislaid her false teeth again and was too busy looking for them to pay any attention to what anybody else did.

I wandered out into the garden, where presently I came upon Pick.

"What's wrong, Pick?" I asked.

She tried to smile, but somehow it didn't come off just right.

"It's Lewis. He accused me of going down stairs that night to meet Claude."

"He—what?" I exclaimed incredulously. "How utterly absurd!"

She looked away.

"But that's the worst of it," she admitted. "I—I did."

I could only stare. Was Pick, the nicest one of the Dumonts—with a certain exception, of course— going to let me down like that?

"Oh, it wasn't for that reason," she hurried on, again seeming to read my mind. "I merely went down to try to persuade Claude to—" Suddenly she seemed to change the subject. "Peter," she asked, with apparent irrelevance, "did you ever wonder why Dede and Henri never play card games of any kind?"

"Why, no," I admitted, wondering what in the world that had to do with it. "I thought it was simply that they don't care for cards."

"Well, it isn't," she said. Her voice had grown tight and bitter now. "I can tell you this because I know Dede would tell you himself if you asked him. He and Henri have never permitted themselves to learn a card game because—because gambling is in the Dumont blood. But Lee and Beau didn't have so much foresight—or so much will power."

"Pick," I asked, "who was that third man?"

Once more she seemed to grasp my meaning.

"It was father," she admitted. "I'm going to tell you everything, Peter," she went on after the barest of hesitations. "You've probably guessed most of it anyway; and besides, I've got to talk to someone.

"Lee and Beau had been playing poker with Claude every night since they got here. Generally Beau is fairly lucky at cards, although Lee hardly ever is; but this time they both lost heavily. Then when their losses had reached fifteen thousand dollars, Claude refused to play any more, and demanded settlement."

"Beau says they hadn't realized it was so much until Claude showed them the figures," she continued. "They asked him to give them an opportunity to recover some of their losses, but he refused. Then they—had to admit that they were unable to pay."

So that, or part of it, had been what Bobby and I had overheard.

"And Claude threatened to take the matter up with your father?" I asked.
