Oregon Students At Finals

By ANN CARSON
Capital Journal Correspondent

University of Oregon, Eugene (Special) — The University of Oregon library is fairly bursting at the seams. Why? It's approaching finals week. In fact, finals week is only 96 hours away. The saddest tale we have heard at the library this term is about the person who discovered in his 10 o'clock class Wednesday that the 30-page paper for the term's work was due this Friday. The unhappy part about this is the fact that he didn't know that a term paper had been assigned.

Frown lines of concentration are beginning to appear on people's faces as they scurry from class to the library, and from the library home to dinner. (No coffee break this week.) Some of the scurrying souls are: Joan Marie Miller, Norma Hamilton, Barbara Farnam, Joyce Armstrong, Sharon Brown, Sharon Hamilton, Bill Paulus, Jim Elliot, Tom Paulus, Ed Meyers, Wade Carter.

With finals week so close at hand activities on campus take a back seat. But a few things still go on. Beardsley Ruml, one of the big names in American industry, spoke for the one-day industrial convention that was held on campus this week.

We are all looking forward to spring vacation and after that, spring term. It is actually the best term here because of the sunny weather, after all of this rain it will be welcomed gladly. There is one fact that we all are thankful for, and that is that it is raining this week and hopefully next. It is always easier and less painful to get finals completed during the bad weather.
