Gunfighter's Return

By LESLIE ERNENWEIN

When Eve saw Charley Bonn come out of the shiloh she maneuvered to meet him widway across the street. The old homesteader appeared wortied. He said, "That show what Stromberg will do to grab a piece of Sirip graze. Link made it look like a personal grueges betwist him and Rimbaud, but it was meant to be a chopdown, pureand simple."

"Is Jim still at the saloon?" Eve asked.

Bonn nodded, "I tried to talk him into leaving town with me hour said he had to help Limpy Smith finish off a quart of bourbon. Some darn foolishness about how important it was to drink twenty toasts."

"So Limpy has taken up with Jim," murmured Eve. And then she said something that didn't make sense to Charley Bonn: "Sam isn't a drinking man, thank God.

Bonn was wondering about that as he drove out of town with his wife. When he repeated Eve's words to Maria she said, "The poor girl had a drunkard for a father, and is set on having a sober man for a husband. Anyone with a lick of sense would understand her feeling the way she does."

"But what's Rimbaud dering drunk got to do with it?" Bonn asked.

"He could've been an old flame of Eve's for all we know," Maris, and the boveryed the Roman of Eve's for all we know," Maris, of Eve's for all we know," Maris, and is covered to Rimbaud's whiskered - blackened of Eve's for all we know," Maris of Eve's for all we kno plained. "Whatever got into him, Lew?"

Stromberg shrugged, maintaining the attitude of a mildly interested observer. "Some personal grudge," he suggested.

Limpy endeavored to sift to-bacco into the paper, most of it missing. He gave up and put the sack back in his pocket, again swaying, and announced. "But Doc Odegarde was a crackerjack surgeon, regardless, Look how he carved this knee of mine."

As Rimbaud turned to look at the stump Smith raised for inspection, he saw Hugh Jubal and Red Shafter come through the betwings. Remembering that Jubal was Stromberg's foreman, Rimbaud thought: That makes five of them in town. He decided he'd had enough bourbon.

"Doc cut right through the joint," Limpy bragged, and lifted the leg so high he lost his balance.

Rimbaud attempted to grab him, but I dimpy stragged, and lifted the leg as high he lost his him.

post!" Jubal protested.

He gave Smith a shove that sent him sprawling into the spittle-stained sawdust, whereupon Red Shafter cackled, "Behold the face on the berroom floor!"

Jim Rimbaud endeavored to convince himself that this was none of his affair; that Limpy Smith was just a drunken dishwasher who'd always be shoved around by

"But what's Rimbaud being drunk got to do with tt?" Bonn asked.

"He could've been an old flame of Eve's for all we know," Maria suggested with feminine intuition. "Seems like I remember hearing Faith Shumway mention something about him sparkin' Eve Odegarde when he was here before."

"I wouldn't put no store in what Faith Shumway says, one way or the other." Charley muttered. "She's got a waggy tongue."

You'd of thought Eve was some Burro Alley trollop the way Della treated her."

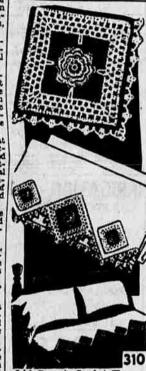

"Maybe it's the other way around." Charley said. "What do you mean by that?"

"Nothing." Oharey muttered. "Nothin' at all."

Fonso Peal had replaced the smashed lamp above his bar and now helped serve a crowd of customers attracted by the fight. "It's an ill wind that doesn't blow some good," he confined to Finucane.

Buck Aubrey came into the Shiloh and joined Lew Stromberg and cand all his vanity, the man was dominated by a calculating caution that seemed in direct contrast the bar. "Ernie's right arm is broke," he reported. "Doc says th' ake upwards an hour to fix a sast."
