

Little Miss and Teen Fashions Echo Grown-Up Styling and Fabrics

With the first Spring breezes, little glamour girls may turn to thoughts of hopsotch or "soda sessions," but they'll also be turning to thoughts of clothes, and what a world of fashion magic awaits them this spring! They'll be thrilled by the ensemble look, patterned after the handsomely coordinated outfits mothers will be wearing this spring.

The interpretations of the ensemble are clever and varied—print cotton dresses worn with wool coats lined in a matching print; skirts to match the lining of a coat and facing of a bonnet; tweedy woolen or cotton fabrics in tailored suits with matching loose topcoats; denim, heavy cotton, or slubbed rayon suits lined with bright cotton prints to match gay sleeveless blouses. These are a few of the many change-about possibilities in spring ensembles for tots through teens.

In tots and toddler dresses, the old-fashioned look is the new fashion—charming little dresses in wallpaper prints on cotton and organdie, dainty embroidered organdies; dresses with ruffled sleeves, party aprons, embroidered fichus.

Teens and juniors will be thrilled with the truly sophisticated styles concocted for them this spring. The sheath silhouette, strictly a misses' and women's fashion, is now definitely a "must" in the junior wardrobe for spring. It is frequently interpreted with back interest—a gathering of pleats, or a back wrap.

These sheaths, featured in every fabric—cottons, linens, print silks—are perfect counterparts for the young ensemble.

The slim look carries through in all teen and junior fashions—the straight collarless coat, tapered box jackets, the narrow pleats or princess lines.

There's a world of excitement in fabrics—cotton tweeds for ensembles, rayon orlon blends for suits and skirts, poodle cloths and pastel fleeces for toppers; textured woolsens for all types for loose topcoats lined to match dresses of solid and striped cotton or striped rayon taffeta.

For dresses—the limelight is on embossed cottons which don't require ironing on "patent leather" prints—shiny black overlays on glazed cotton—on colorful, clear-cut prints for cottons and silks.

The trend in color is away from traditional pastels and into more vibrant shades like spice pink, mint, watermelon, tangerine, citron yellow.

Black is the most important through teens—as a background or accent color in cotton prints—tiny floral, stripes and checks. It is very good as an accent or trim for all ages; all styles—black ball fringe, jet buttons, patent belts, collars and cuffs of glazed cotton.

Dimity... swiss-type sheers, powder-puff muslins... lacy and embroidered cottons—all wear a delicate air and an entirely different feeling for spring-into-summer.

All these wonderful new colors, fabrics, and styles make this spring's fashions a magic world for little misses everywhere.

For Toddlers this spring, 'Fifi' jump-in sunsuit in white terrycloth.
