

Business Men Talk on Europe

Washington (AP)—Mutual Security Administrator Harold E. Stassen said Wednesday a private survey of 12 countries which have received American aid indicates some steps can be made for more effectiveness and less administrative cost.

Stassen talked to reporters at the White House after 55 business men reported to President Eisenhower on their recent surveys of MSA beneficiary countries. They were divided into teams for each of the European Aid nations plus Formosa, Indochina, and the Philippines.

Clarence Francis, Bronxville, N. Y., president of General Foods, was in charge of the "evaluation operation."

Stassen said some of their reports are classified but an over-all report made to him by the businessmen will be made public in about 10 days. The group will come back here May 7 to see what MSA has done to carry out the recommendations.

President Eisenhower responded with informal remarks to Francis' oral statement of their findings and Stassen called the response "very inspiring." The applause could be heard outside of the executive offices in the White House lobby.
