Morningside Boulders From Volcanic Ash

The huge boulders that have been encountered in the excavation for the Morningside public school on South 12th street are the result of a volcanic flow, ages old, reports W. Hernian Clark, professor emeritus of physical science at Willamette university.

Commonly known as basalt, it was believed in some quarters the rock was the result of a glacial deposit. However, Prof. Clark states they are a part of a volcanic flow that

Sig Unander Wants O'Malley Questioned

Silverton O.R.—State Treasurer Sig Unander has challenged ex-Prison Warden Virgil O'Malley to state the facts of his recent charge that public officials have benefitted from penitentiary labor.

O'Malley made the accusation Saturday at a Young Democrats' meeting in Eugene. Unander, speaking at a Young Republicans' meeting here, said, "I insist that if O'Malley has any information involving profit-taking by state officials he should report the facts to the Marion county district attorney."

O'Malley named no names, but declared he wanted to leave the state and didn't want "to have to stay around here to testify before a grand jury."

FEAR WATER SHORTAGES

covers much of the hill territory in the southern part of the city.

Weathering by water and air cracked the surface of the volcanic flow. Once fissures were developed in the sheet, water and air further tended to chip off the edges of the rock until they became oval in shape. This gave them the appearance of having been tumbled about.

Persons who have excavated for residences on Fairmount hill and Candalaria have encountered rock deposits similar to that on South 12th street.

Dr. Daniel H. Schulze, member of Willamette university's faculty, took advantage of a huge boulder he encountered while digging a basement near Hanson avenue. The obstruction was so large, Dr. Schulze determined that the expense of removal would be excessive. So he shaped it up a bit, placed a concrete slab over it and the result was a basement table.

Where it is somewhat dangerous to use explosives to crack the huge boulders, some builders have adopted the policy of building fire on top of them and then pouring cold water over them after they have become heated. The surface cracks, and if the process is pursued the obstruction may be worn down materially.

He said the "free play" machines are operating in many counties, anyway, despite an attorney general's opinion of several years ago holding the games are illegal.
