How often does your youngster ride in a friend's car—to a movie, to a ball game or to a school affair? When this occurs, we usually don't rush over to find out what kind of auto insurance he carries for the protection of the passengers. But what if your youngster is injured while riding in a car other than your own? Have you wondered if there is a sufficient amount of medical expense insurance on the car to pay for injuries to passengers, if any? What about the medical expense insurance on your own car—will it take care of this contingency? Here's one way to make sure:

Take $1.50 out of your pocket and multiply that amount by the number of children in your family; take this amount to your auto insurance agent and ask him to put an endorsement on your policy which provides, "Drive Other Car Medical Expense" and if you already have $2,000 medical expense on your policy this amount will buy $2,000 for your children while they are riding in any other private passenger car. It's as simple as that.
