Marine Tells of War Of Attrition by Reds

Seoul (AP)—Thirty-one Marines started out on the patrol. Three came back unscathed. Fourteen were killed. And a hard-bitten Marine serving his second hitch in Korea said wryly Wednesday: "Those were unusually high casualties, but it gives you an idea of the kind of war we are up against."

"In other words, we are fighting the kind of war the Chinese want to fight—a war of attrition. "I think that if we ever get these Chinks out in the open we'll cut them to pieces just like we did the North Koreans."

Patrols on the nightly runs must travel a few well defined paths. It is almost fatal to vary from the paths—both sides are heavily mined. Unfortunately the Chinese have these paths well zeroed in and can give the patrols a horrible time.

The communists have a wide variety of heavy weapons—120 MM. artillery, 60, 82 and 120 MM. mortars and a 76 MM. high velocity piece.

And, the Marine said, "The Chinese are darned good with their mortars. "In a battle on one outpost the trail to the outpost was brought under mortar fire. The Chinese began to walk the mortar fire down the trail and when it came to the point where the trail makes a 90-degree right turn behind the hill the mortar fire walked around it unerringly.

"About 50 percent of our casualties in the battle were men leaving or walking into the area."
