3 American Women Missing in Collision

Harwich, England, (AP)—Three American women are missing from the North Sea collision of a British steamer and American freighter.

A sorrowing survivor told how she and her 13-year-old son recited the 23rd Psalm to comfort the agony of possibly one of the missing Americans. Rescue workers toiling through the wreckage of the British-owned Duke of York found four bodies—three women and a man—but they had not been identified. Five persons are known to have perished in the accident Wednesday. The three Americans missing, Miss Ann Spring, identified as a secretary of an Army department official in Washington; and two teachers—Miss Gilda Jordet of Rocky Ford, Colo., and Miss Viola Larson of La Crosse, Wis.

One body rescue workers believed to be that of Miss Spring was removed from the wreckage Thursday. She occupied cabin 233. Next door, Mrs. Norma Hoyt of Anchorage, Alaska, was trapped for five hours with her son, Harold, 13, before being rescued. Mrs. Hoyt, sister of Miss Jordet, said the woman in 233 cried out: "Oh, I'm in agony. Please get a priest. Get a doctor, get a priest."

Mrs. Hoyt and her son sang a hymn and recited the 23rd Psalm in an effort to comfort the woman.

Police found the passports of the three missing women in the debris of the 4,190-ton Duke of York, which lost its bow in a collision with the 7,607-ton American freighter Haiti Victory 40 miles east of Harwich Wednesday.

About 500 passengers and crewmen were rescued. Twelve passengers, including two U.S. Air Force officers, were injured.

The only victim identified thus far is Mrs. Argo Ansdel, 54, an Englishwoman who died in a hospital Wednesday night. Miss Larson and Miss Jordet were traveling with Mrs. Hoyt of Anchorage, Alaska, where Miss Larson teaches school. Mrs. Hoyt and her son, Harold, 13, were rescued Wednesday after being trapped in the wreckage for five harrowing hours. Miss Jordet is Mrs. Hoyt's sister.

A British Railways spokesman said that Mr. and Mrs. Merrill D. Ely of Portland, Ore., were among the Duke of York's passengers that escaped injury. He said they both were landed at Dover Wednesday night.

Juveniles in Police News

Juveniles filled up a good share of the space on the police blotter Thursday morning after four of them were picked up by city police on eight separate charges, and a 21-year-old youth was charged with furnishing intoxicating liquor to a minor.

A 17-year-old Woodburn boy led the list of violations. After he was picked up for driving the wrong way on a one-way street, he was also charged with driving with defective brakes, illegal possession of intoxicating liquor and carrying a concealed weapon. His 16-year-old girl friend was arrested for juvenile delinquency and turned over to Mrs. Nona White, county juvenile officer.

Police said the lad had a partially-filled bottle of wine in the car and they found an unloaded revolver under the driver's seat in the car. The boy refused to tell where he got the wine, and said he did not know the gun was in the car. He was cited to juvenile court on the four counts.

Richard Walton Shattuck, 21, 402 South 17th street, was fined $150 in municipal court Thursday morning on a charge of furnishing liquor to a minor.

Shattuck and two teenage youths were stopped in Shattuck's car, which one of the youths was driving. Officers said they found a number of bottles of beer in the car and
