The Voice of Love

By WILLIAM NEUBAUER

CHAPTER 25

It wasn't until August first that Dan and his uncle once more returned from San Francisco. The gave her the San Francisco. The gave her the San Francisco. The Book of the San Francisco the Save her the San Francisco. The Save her the San Francisco. The Save her time to think. That, she discovered, was something she'd really not done since a certain evening when twinkling black eyes had met hers on the verands. And that, she also discovered, was something that had to be remedied. Dan or Bob, life as a doctor's wife? And die she spiper Dance Doctor as much as a farmer's wife? And die she spiper Dance Doctor as much as a farmer's been talking with Doctor." He nodded. "I know." She grimsed, "Nancy does talk a lot, doesn't she she will be shown be she will be she will

She almost waned aned done that,
"I don't love you, Bob."
He couldn't be discouraged.
"You do. By the way, I've done some thinking, I'm going to oppose your fellow. Doctor's been showing me facts and figures. There's a lot more involved than just building a hospital and buying equipment. The cost of supplies is terrific, the cost of nurses and other doctors is terrific. The only way your fellow could make his investment pay would be to clip, but good.
She nodded. "My views, too, Bob."

his investment pay would be to clip, but good.

She nodded. "My views, too, Bob."

"Good girl."

"If the two men weren't so hot-tempered! If they'd just get together and—"

But that was when Dan Curtis came back from San Francisco. He drove up the private road between the towering eucalyptus trees and parked the car next to the garege. He grinned as they came to the door. "How do you like the buggy?"

The buggy was a gleaming Cadillac with white sidewall the sand sparking chrome trim.

"Not bad." conceded Bob o'Grien. He forced a man-of-the-world laugh. "I suppose you've come to take her away?"

"If you don't mind, old man!"

If Bob didn't have the polish he had the manners. He bowed. "Rare beauty," he intoned, "belongs to all."

She went bouyanty to the new Cadillac and made herself comportation on the roomy front seat. Big, heavy, the car glided back down the private road to the junction with the highway. But Dan didn't head back to town He drove to an observation point they'd found one day and parked the car there, rolling the windows down to the fresh sait breeze.
