To Kiss, or Kill

CHAPTER 2

Mandell got to his feet and wrapped a bath towel around his loins. "Just a minute."

The towel slipped and fell on top of the girl. He snatched another towel from the rack and padded across the room. Almost to the door he looked back. He'd left the bathroom door open and the dead girl's foot and leg showed plainly.

He walked back and closed the bathroom door. He had to have time to think. Had he come to the room with the girl, or hadn't he? And after that, what had happened?

The room-service waiter was a middle-aged man with tired eyes. He was carrying the pint of whisky on a silver tray, with two glasses and a silver pitcher of cracked ice.

"Just put it on the dresser," Mandell said.

"Yes, sir."

Mandell extracted the bills from his pocket and laid a five and a one, all he had left except some silver, on the tray. "That cover it?"

The waiter loosened the cap on the pint and set it and the glasses on the dresser. "That's fine, Mr. Mandell. Thank you. Thank you a lot." He permitted himself a smile. "You're pitching a little one, eh?"

He picked up the silver pitcher and started for the bathroom.

Mandell stopped him. "No. No water. I—I never use it. That's fine, just as it is."

The waiter emptied the silver pitcher of cracked ice into the glass pitcher on the dresser. "Whatever you say, Mr. Mandell. Some men use a chaser, some don't."

"I don't." Mandell said.

The waiter turned. "Will there be anything else, Mr. Mandell?"

"No," Mandell said. "Nothing."

The waiter walked to the door, carrying the tray and pitcher. Then, with his hand on the knob, he turned and looked pointedly at the closed door of the bathroom.

"Look. It's none of my business, Mr. Mandell. But I wouldn't want to see you get into trouble. Have fun. But be quiet about it, see?" He made a deprecatory gesture.

Alone, Mandell locked the door and leaned against it.

"Have fun," the room waiter had said.

Mandell uncapped the pint and let whisky trickle down his throat to nerve himself to look at the girl again. She was still there. There were no marks of violence on her body except for a faint purple bruise on her jaw.

He sat on the edge of the bathtub, looking at the girl's face. There was no doubt about it. She was the same blonde he'd talked to in Johnny's Bar. He remembered the mole on her cheek. He remembered handing her a line about how pretty her earrings were. She was still wearing the earrings.

It was close in the bathroom and hot. The dead girl used the same perfume Gale did. She had used the same perfume.

Mandell walked into the other room, picked up the phone, and asked for an outside wire. The day barman in Johnny's had gone off duty, but he was still in the place.

"Did I walk out of there with a blonde?" Mandell asked him.

"Yes, you did, Barney," the barman said.

"What time was that?"

"I'd say it was around one o'clock this afternoon. Maybe a little later."

"How long was I gone?"

The barman chuckled. "Long enough."

Mandell gripped the phone so hard his hand hurt. "Did I say anything when I came back?"

"No, you didn't." the barman said. "And I didn't ask. I figured it was none of my business. But why all the questions, Barney?"

Mandell cradled the phone and walked back into the bathroom. He was breathing hard again. His chest muscles hurt. His head ached.

He ran cold water in the bowl and, filling his hands with it, ran them over his face and hair, allowing the water to trickle down his cheek. It felt good.

He splashed more water on his face and chest. Then what had happened? They had walked out of the bar together. He remembered that. Then, to the best of his recollection, he had changed his mind and had told her so. On the corner of Dearborn Street. And the little blonde had cursed him. She'd called him everything in the book, including a big, dumb Polack.

He dried his face and hair with a towel and combed his hair. And realized his hands were trembling. One thing was certain. He wasn't going back to the asylum. He'd had enough of that.

Hiding the body wouldn't do him any good. Once she was found, someone would remember seeing her enter the hotel. Thinking he could leave her in the hall or put her in another room was just more crazy thinking. Even the room waiter had known there was someone in his bathroom.

Mandell washed his face and hands again, with hot water and soap this time. Then he went out in the other room and picked his shorts and pants from the floor and put them on. The room had been cleaned. The maid wouldn't come in again until tomorrow morning. By that time, he could be in San Francisco. He could take a boat from there to Hawaii, or maybe the Philippines.

Dayton

Dayton — On Sunday morning at 8:45, a breakfast was served at the Christian church honoring three seniors of the high school class who will graduate on Wednesday, May 20. They are Norman Robinson, Robert Reeder and Lois Hopkins. Mrs. Harry Sherman has been their Sunday school teacher.

The Country Flower club met Wednesday, May 13, with Mrs. Delaurice Melming, at Alderman Farms.

Mrs. Harry Gray, president, had charge of the business meeting, after which Mrs. Jim Penland led a discussion on Roses.

During refreshments, Mrs. Helming played piano selections.

Mrs. A. F. Wilson spent Friday and Saturday with Mrs. Charles Hagan while Mr. Hagan was in the General hospital. Mr. Hagen returned home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Finley had as dinner guests his sister, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Willson on Sunday.

In the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Jess Harris and son Lester of LaFayette, called in the afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Keith Coburn entertained a group of relatives and friends over the weekend, (May 16-17) on their pleasure boat, "The Malihini," which is docked at Newport.

Early Sunday morning the group sailed about 15 miles and caught about 90 red snapper and ling cod.

Mr. Coburn's mother, Mrs. Nelle Coburn, was the star fisherman of the group. She reeled in a red snapper and ling cod on the same line.

Mr. and Mrs. Eldon C. Troyer and family have moved to Crescent City, Calif., where he has employment.

Mrs. Carl Rasaka entertained a group of old friends and relatives of Mrs. Kenneth Bell of McMinnville, on Friday evening, May 15. The occasion being a "pink and blue" shower for Mrs. Bell, who was formerly Jeanne Westfall.

Mrs. Johnnie Becker of Salem was co-hostess. Refreshments were served at a late hour.

Former Washington Redskin pro football star Tommy Mont is now backfield coach at his alma mater, the University of Maryland.
