Metropolitan New York to See Road Races

Washington, D.C.—The return of international road racing to metropolitan New York this year was assured when the contest board of the American Automobile Association this week announced sanction for a 200-mile sports car road race at Floyd Bennett airfield, August 29.

The last international road event for New York, and the first in America, was the Vanderbilt Cup race held on Long Island, prior to 1910. The armed services air wings will share in the receipts, according to J. S. Donaldson, race director for the event. The entire net profit will be shared by the navy, marine, army and coast guard air wings.

The course will be 4.2 miles long with eight turns and a 7,200-foot straightaway, enabling the cars to reach 160 m.p.h. speeds. Qualifying heats, by price class, will be held in the morning and the endurance event, based on formula, gets an afternoon starting time.

This is the second major sports car event carded by AAA this season. The Sebring, 12-hour Grand Prix d'Endurance, one of the seven world championship sports car events, was held in March.
