

Football Players to Get Protection for Teeth

By GAYLE TALBOT
New York (AP)—It's sneaked up on us between football seasons, but we learn that by next fall the college or high school player who doesn't have his mouth full of rubber to protect his teeth against the ravages of shoulder blocks will definitely be listed among the havenots of the gridiron world.

This, we feel, will be especially welcome news to parents of the smaller fry who normally have to foot the bills for inlays and bridges. College athletic treasuries also will benefit once they get past the initial cost of the muffers, which are similar to those worn by every ring fighter these days.

It hasn't been so long, incidentally, since the boxing fan with a close-up seat could count on getting a tooth or two in his lap almost any evening. They used to roll around like popcorn.

For our news about the wholesale employment of the tooth protectors we are indebted to the Voit Rubber Corp. of Los Angeles, the same outfit which popularized the rubber football in recent years.

We learned that the National Federation of High School Athletic Associations has recommended that the protectors be worn by every football player, and that college coaches across the nation are falling in line in droves. It is claimed that the device also makes concussions and knockouts rare.

Statistics gathered by safety groups in recent years disclosed that more than half of football injuries are to the mouth, teeth, lips or jaw. A survey by the University of Missouri among 62 major schools disclosed that 4,000 gridders finished the 1950 season with a deficit of 733 teeth either chipped or gone forever.

Dr. Jack Cathcart, a Berkeley, Calif., dentist and sports enthusiast, decided to do something about it. After trying his hand on several boxers, he outfitted the entire Berkeley High School squad of 49 with specially built guards. Didn't charge them a cent. When after four years the Berkeley team reported not a single break or chip, the good doctor decided he was in business.

He found four sizes were sufficient to fit all the mouths in America. The Voit company figured out a method of turning them out wholesale, and there we are. Twenty-three Northern California high schools have used the protectors for an entire season with nary a concussion or dental casualty.

The only small drawback to the things is that a player can't talk while his mouth is full of rubber. They are easily removed, however, in the event he has something important to say to an opponent.

Stanford Wins Opening Game Against Oregon

Stanford, Calif. (AP)—Coach Everett Dean's Stanford Indians exploded for five runs in the first inning and then coasted to a 9-3 victory over University of Oregon here yesterday in the first of a best two-out-of-three games series for the Pacific Coast conference baseball championship.

The two teams clash again this afternoon with a third game to follow if necessary.

The unlucky Oregon pitcher in the first inning was Norm Forbes. He was relieved by Bill Blodgett, but the Indians touched both hurlers for a total of four doubles, a home run and six singles. The Webfoots got 11 hits off Starter Bob Murphy and Mike Acker but were not able to overcome the Indians' big first inning.

Murphy, the sensational righthander who pitched Stanford to victory in all eight of the Indians' Southern division wins this season, faced Oregon for only four innings, giving indication that Dean planned to use his ace moundman again today.

Anniversary of Vanport Flood

Portland (AP)—Saturday is the fifth anniversary of the destruction of Vanport in the Columbia river flood.

In the five years since, the Columbia has risen out of its banks every spring but not to dangerous heights. The crest this spring is expected to be 20 feet at Vancouver, which is five feet above flood stage. That would be the lowest flood level in seven years.

Vanport, where 17,000 people lived in 1948, now is a pasture for cattle. The buildings that were crushed by the flood were sold for salvage and only a few things now are left as reminders that the flat land behind high dikes once was a city. These chiefly are the supports for water towers, paved streets here and there, and an occasional foundation and concrete slab.

Although 17,000 people lived there and the destruction was complete in less than two hours from the time the dike broke, only 14 lives were lost.

Recount Due in New Mexico

Albuquerque, N.M. (AP)—Officials launched preparations today for a recount, due to start Monday, in New Mexico's contested U.S. Senate election.

The way was cleared late yesterday for the recount brought on by charges from Republican Patrick J. Hurley that last fall's election of his opponent, Sen. Chavez (D-N.M.), was marred by irregularities.

The two remaining major hurdles holding up proceedings were removed when the Senate Elections Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Barrett (R-Wyo.), rejected two requests from Chavez.

The veteran New Mexico senator, who has held the seat since 1936, had asked that the contest be dismissed and that a bill of particulars be prepared detailing the voting irregularities his opponent alleged.
