San Francisco's austere landom found itself with a ball club that may be in fourth place before the night is over. Both teams have double-headers on the fire tonight. Seattle, now 3½ games behind the Stars, tangles with Portland in musty old Vaughn Street Park. The Seals, only one game behind the fourth place Beavers, battle their Oakland cousins twice in the Emeryville Band Box. George Schmees hit a sixth	inning home run last night to give Seattle a 2-1 nod over Portland and while Hollywood was taking a 5-4 trimming from Los Angeles. The Seals walloped Oakiand 8-2 with southpaw John McCall besting the Oaks' great Al Gettel. In the other PCL elash, San Diego squeezed Sacramento deeper into the basement, 7-1. It is interesting to note that, despite the fact that the antelope population of Oregon is diminishing, the game commission will issue 400 antelope permits this season. This is odd, because the game commission has many times expressed its concern regarding the antelope, and has as yet been unable its concern regarding the antelope, and has as yet been unable to determine the reason for the steadily diminishing herds. Tay catches, and trout angling has been good to fair in Tillation pening, and hunters are asked to report any dead or ailing antelope that they may come across. Oregon's remaining antelope are relatively few in number-for the most part, they inhabit ranges where the food problem is not great, and where they create no problems for ranchers as the deer do in some regions. To us, there seems little validity to allow a kill, however small, when the species of the animal hunted is already diminishing from reasons unknown. Surely, the couple of thousand dollars the permits will bring to the commission does not justify the hunt—and we doubt if antelope hunters as a group could bring enough "pressure" on the commission to force a season on antelope. We'd like to know the real reason . . As far as we're concerned, we feel there should be NO season until it has been learned what is causing the decrease in antelope, aside from hunting.

SANTIAM ANGLING GOOD

Fifty minutes driving from Salem can put a fisherman on some of the most interesting water in Oregon, where, believe it or not, some mighty big trout can be found. We're talking about the North Santiam, and thinking especially of a stretch of water above Gates that we fished recently. For a stretch of water above Gates that we fished recently. For the last two hours of the day, fish literally tore the water up as they rose to feed on a batch of small caddis files. We took fish on a number 14 Royal Coachman dry fly, and our companion did as well using a number 16 red hackle fly. The fish were very selective, and spent a lot of time just looking the fly over, then slapping it with their tails. This is a good indication that a wet fly fished just under the surface would have been successful. Did we try it?—No, truth is, we like to see the trout take a lure on the surface when they're feeding like they were that particular evening. No fish they're feeding like they were that particular evening. No fish taken was over a feot long, but we saw a number roll that were better than 18 inches—and, lopping off a couple of inches for exaggeration, they were still pretty nice fish!

Recent reports say that the rises in the evening on this area of the river are still continuing, and a handy man with either wet or dry fly should take fish. Also—though we hate to mention it—the spin angler should also have luck, especially with the big ones. Despite the upheaval man has created on the Santiam, in spots, it is still one of the most interesting trout streams in Oregon.
