Stook, Paulus 11/2 games so four teams are still in the fight for the title. Legion team. If ever any team really deserved a championship, it is this one.

When the first call for Legion practice was issued about the time school let out, 60 enthusiastic boys showed up in hopes of making the team.

Genna was confronted wit the problem of whittling the size of the squad down to a workable number. Since he didn't have much time to spend studying each boy, Genna decided the best way to eliminate boys from the squad would be to conduct gruelling practice sessions day after day. The less interested boys, and those with less hustle, would then drop out voluntarily, Genna figured.

Every day, as soon as Genna got off work from his truck driving job, he'd gather his gang together at 5:30 and put them through three hours or more of rugged drills. When it got too dark to see the ball, Genna would have the boys slide. When they slid so long they got sore on one side, Genna would have them slide on the other side. When they got so sore on both sides that they couldn't slide feet-first at all, Genna would drill them on diving head-first for the base. Then he'd run them for two or three laps around the field.

That type of practice put the boys in shape, alright, but it didn't succeed in cutting down the squad. Only a few gave up and dropped out. So, slowly and surely, Genna reduced the size of his roster after carefully studying the abilities of each boy.

All the time, he'd drive the boys harder and harder in practice, hoping that more of them would give up and quit the team, sparing him the unpleasant task of cutting them.

A few more boys left. But nearly all of them kept or plugging, hustling through every practice session as if the world's championship depended upon it. "Cutting some of those fellows off the team was the hardest thing I ever did in my life," Genna will tell you.

Out of it all came the 15 young men who comprised the Salem team which yesterday won the state championship. They worked hard for that championship. And all the kids that were cut from the squad along the way worked just as hard. While they did not play in the tournament. and some of them did not play at all, their hustle and determination in those long, after-dark practice sessions were an inspiration and a challenge to the boys who did

When you've got that kind of boys living here, it's no wonder that Salem won the state championship.
