Patterson Acts

The ways and means committee of the last legislature considered the matter of providing a bond but refused to appropriate any money to cover the premium of such a bond for the 1953-55 biennium.

State Rep. David Baum, a member of the committee, and who is an officer in the Oregon National Guard, contended that the premium for the bond sought by the army was entirely too high. At that time, the premium was estimated to cost the state $3500 a year.

Amendment Suggested
Governor Patterson said that he felt that the defense act might well be amended by congress to eliminate the bond requirement on the part of states and said he might consult with members of the Oregon congressional delegation suggestion. However, he would take no action, until after the emergency board has passed on the matter.

"I am opposed to the state of Oregon spending any money for a bond of this character unless we find that there is no other solution," the governor said. "We have at least a year to take action and you may be certain that the state will not permit the withdrawal of ROTC units from either of the two state institutions."

In an opinion issued by former Attorney General Neuner it was held that under the state constitution the state cannot obligate itself for any sum in excess of $50,000 without consent of the people. The value of the ROTC property is estimated at approximately $600,000.
