FROM Peg in Washington

BY ALENE (PEG) PHILLIPS

Washington, D.C., September 8.

Dear Marian:

An audience that was a bit of a cross-section of Washington assembled in the ballroom of the Mayflower last Wednesday noon for a luncheon of the Women's National Press club. Originally scheduled for a smaller dining room, the increase in reservations to some 325 made the larger room necessary. The occasion? The first speaking appearance of Dr. Kinsey since the fanfare of publicity of his newest volume. Among those in attendance were wives of several ambassadors, Mrs. Gordon Moore, sister of Mrs. Eisenhower, Cornelia Otis Skinner and Constance Bennett from theatrical circles, the head of the District Bar Association, an official of the Mental Health Institute, two well-known New York newspaper men, two or three of the publishers and chief editors of Washington papers, radio, television, and magazine executives, the head of the federal children's bureau, and Washington reporters. As an invited guest, I had gone with the hope of hearing the Washington newspaper women fire fast questions at the speaker, but the luncheon was too lengthy and I had to scuttle back to the office before the question and answer period. I went with definite prejudices and none of them was lifted by the discourse of the speaker. One indication of the publicity phase was the several references to the publication date of the book by the speaker and also the remark "Read Chapter Number So-and-so" as he terminated discussion of one point.

At any rate, I met several interesting people at our table, several of whom contributed cynically witty remarks that nearly convulsed our remote corner of the room, and the luncheon itself was tempting. Hazel Markel, president of the Women's National Press club, and former Oregonian, presided most capably in her introduction of special guests and the speaker. Incidentally, Mrs. Markel has 13 television and radio shows a week, with her own program on a nation-wide network.

Visitors at the Department of the Interior this morning were Mr. and Mrs. David C. Dunaway and their daughters, Melissa and Sancha. The Secretary had a staff meeting underway but had an opportunity for a quick greeting to the Salem residents. They drove east to North Carolina, Mrs. Dunaway's former home state, and were going on from there to Detroit for an archivists' meeting. The Dunaways were married in Washington and Melissa was born here, consequently, they were recalling many memories of their years here.

Ralph Chambers, brother of Ted and Joe Chambers of Salem, was a visitor at the McKays apartment this week. Since the McKays had seen members of the Chambers family during their vacation in Oregon, the trio had much of mutual interest to discuss.

Secretary McKay is devoting some noon hours this week and next to Community Chest luncheons since he serves as chairman of the governmental section of the campaign. Groups of 25 workers in the federal agencies will meet with the Secretary each of four days in the interest of the drive to get under way next month.

Someone who was in mentioned the Pendleton Round-Up and it made all of us Oregonians wish that we could be home this week-end. That is one of the penalties of this 3000 mile distance from familiar sights and events at home. I must admit there are compensations, however, in the life here.

Sincerely, Peg.
