Farm Bureau Takes No Action On Hell's Canyon

Oregon Farm Bureau Federation delegates Saturday continued their work on resolutions proposed by the state resolutions committee, and before their adjournment Saturday afternoon will elect their officers.

Consideration of the resolution was begun Friday afternoon after a special luncheon meeting of the Farm Bureau board of directors and county Farm Bureau presidents with the national secretary-treasurer, Roger Fleming of Washington, D.C.

Late Saturday morning the group voted to take no stand on the Hell's canyon dam, contending they did not have sufficient facts on either side to make a decision. A resolution from Morrow county had asked that the Farm Bureau support Hell's canyon dam. In connection with the power and rural electrification study the State Farm Bureau will ask the American Farm Bureau to watch the depreciation schedules of power companies.

The delegates Saturday morning approved a resolution reaffirming the position that legislative apportionment on population alone is not in the best long range interest of either the urban or rural people of Oregon.

In their education resolution the group advocated the teaching of the three Rs and more emphasis on phonics in the first and second grades.

In their resolution on the protection of rural voting power the Farm Bureau members set forth several recommendations.

The resolution asked that representative signatures throughout the state with a certain number from each congressional district be required on initiative petitions and that 30 per cent of the registered voters in a voting district must cast a vote for a bond issue to pass.

In measures calling for the expenditure of money the Bureau wants the approximate amount of money to be expended to be set forth and the methods of raising or providing the funds included.

The resolution also asked that its membership support the effort to declare unconstitutional the voting of bonds and taxes upon property by non-property owners and that the federation oppose any endeavor to limit, disqualify or interfere with representative voting power in rural Oregon.

The Bureau delegates went on record as wanting a budget balanced by limiting governmental expenditures to tax revenue.

As a long term policy they listed: Gradual reduction of the national debt, handled in such a manner to permit suitable price level and prosperous economy;

Prompt but temporary reduction of lower bracket of personal income tax rate to within certain limits during periods of low business activity;

Opposition to deficit spending by Federal government bureaus;

The personal and cooperative income tax as the major source of revenue for the federal government and a tax structure to permit averaging of individual incomes over a period of years for tax purposes.

They recommended limiting federal excise taxes to taxes on amusements and the so-called luxury goods, including alcoholic liquors and tobacco, and the repeal of federal tax on transportation and communications be repealed.

That resolution also asked that the state and federal government declare a definite public policy in regard to re-

Optimistic Note Sounded By Fleming of AFBF Staff

Rodger Fleming, secretary-treasurer of the American Farm Bureau Federation, in an address before the Oregon Farm Bureau banquet Friday night was optimistic for agriculture, provided the farmers don't make wrong decisions in dealing with current problems.

In speaking of high prices, Fleming felt that if any politician or political party wants to take credit for the high supports and parities, they also have to take credit for the wars because it was the wars that caused the upward price trend.

"In 1952," he said, "some politicians tried to lure hog producers into accepting 90 percent of parity, but instead the hog producers voluntarily reduced last year's spring pig crop 9 per cent and the fall pig crop 11 per cent as compared to 1951, and in spite of increased quantity of beef and lower prices for beef, hogs increased from 76 of parity in April, 1952, to 118 per cent on September 15, 1953, Fleming stated.

"Cattlemen can rightly be thankful that hog producers didn't listen to seductive music of the same political pied pipers who are trying to trap cattlemen into destroying the losses incurred in recent months. Fortunately, the vast majority of cattle producers recognizes the threat both to their future income and their freedom that price supports on live cattle would constitute."

Discussing wheat, he said the outlook isn't as good as for the cattle men because the wheat surplus is greater than ever before and "if we are to relieve the surplus we must increase our support demand."

Fleming said vital issues, such as price support, will be decided when the Farm Bureau members of the country discuss issues and vote on the 1953 resolutions of the American Farm Bureau Federation in Chicago in December at national convention.

Robert Fleming, of national staff of Farm Bureau Federation, who addressed state convention Friday night at dinner session.
