In November since 1949. One mill which has an employed roll of 250, reported hiring only one person during the past four months.

Charles Wilson, manager of the employment office here, said this reflects a trend everywhere in the state. With a rearrity of work, people are not quitting jobs.

However, Wilson pointed out, there is a slightly better outlook for the future, as small mill owners see prospects of increased demand for their products in sight.

At least one plant is considering enlargement of operations when activity picks up, he said.
